SUE MAYOR FOR FLOOD FUNDS

MELLON BARS COMPROMISE ON BONUS CASH

And Radicals Bolt Drought Agreement

BY ARTHUR CRAWFORD.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Compromises, designed to prevent a special session of congress, encountered rough sledding today.

J. W. LA FOLLETTE JR. [N. & E. photo.]

The proposed compromise for an increase in loans on bonus certificates held by world war veterans, along lines suggested by Owen D. Young, met with objections from Secretary of the Treasury Mellon.

The drought agreement, substituting an expanded $20,000,000 loan program for direct relief appropriations, drew the fire of senate radicals.

"My attention has been called to articles appearing in the public press today," said Secretary Mellon in a formal statement tonight, "suggesting that the treasury department is giving favorable consideration to a so-called compromise measure, looking to the amendment of the adjusted service certificate law. No compromise measure informally suggested to the treasury up to the present time have received its approval."

Mr. Mellon had reference to a proposal submitted to him by representative Isaac Bacharach [Rep., N. J.], on behalf of Republican members of the ways and means committee for an increase of loans on veterans' certificates from 22 to 45 or 50 per cent of their face value. The scheme is estimated to cost upward of $60 million dollars.

Demand Need Be Shown.

While Secretary Mellon may yet approve a modified form of the bonus loan proposal, it is understood he will insist that its benefits be limited to veterans in need and that payments be spread over a period of months. Mr. Mellon has opposed all bills for immediate retirement of the full face value of the bonus certificates.

The radical attack on the drought relief compromise came simultaneously with a declaration from Secretary of Agriculture Hyde with the apparent sanction of President Hoover approving the agreement and giving notice that no government charity will be countenanced under the guise of loans.

Senators Robert M. La Follette [Rep., Wis.] and Burton K. Wheeler [Dem., Mont.] assailed the compromise in the senate. They spoke for the Republican and Democratic radicals, making it evident that this group was not a party to the agreement, as effected yesterday between the administration Republicans and regular Democrats, headed by Senators Joseph T. Robinson and T. H. Caraway [Dem., Ark.].

Conferees Vote Approval.

Conferees of the senate and house on the interior department appropriation bill, to which the senate's original amendment for a $25,000,000 relief appropriation was attached, voted to substitute the $20,000,000 loan proposal for this amendment. In effect, the amendment will amend the $45,000,000 drought loan act. The conference report will be taken up in the senate on Monday and is likely to lead to a stormy debate. Eventual approval is expected, in view of the support pledged by Democrats.

Secretary Hyde, who is in charge of the drought loans, emphasized the administration's position against governmental charity in a letter to Representative Will R. Wood [Rep., Ind.], chairman of the house appropriations committee. Reading of the letter on the floor of the house, late in the day, evoked critical comments from Representative F. H. La Guardia [Rep., N. Y.] and others who have insisted that governmental relief appropriations should be provided for the unemployed in the cities, as well as for the farmers.

That President Hoover's repeated

KIDNAPED GIRL BELIEVED SEEN IN NEW JERSEY

New York, Feb. 7.—[Special.]—A bus driver who believes that he saw Rose Yasso, missing 10 year old Brooklyn girl, with a scar faced man in New Jersey, confidently identified Anthony Cutrone, tailor of Brooklyn, as the man today. He picked Cutrone, who was arrested during the night, out of a line of men at Newark police headquarters.

Meanwhile thirty-five detectives were assigned to various Brooklyn postoffice stations late today following the receipt of a letter by Mrs. Concetta Yasso demanding $1,000 ransom for her daughter. The letter was received through the mail at noon.

Police reported no clews in the hunt for Florence Parker, 22, the daughter of Mrs. James MacDonough, wife of a vice president of the Manufacturers Trust company of New York, missing 13 days from her home in Yonkers. It was reported that she was in love with a West Point cadet, but her family claimed to know of no romance and no difficulties. Her mother reported today that she had received a telephone call asking for ransom, but this was attributed to a crank.

Noank, Conn., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Secure from the eyes of the millions who have acclaimed her America's most famous aviatrix, Miss Amelia Earhart, slender blonde social service worker, who has been the only woman to fly the Atlantic in an airplane, was married here at noon today to George Palmer Putnam, publisher, author and explorer, of New York in his mother's New England home overlooking Long Island sound.

Noank is a quaint little village, celebrated in summer time chiefly for the excellence of the lobsters its fishing population brings up from the sound and nothing as interesting as this has happened there since the big wind and tidal wave of '78. And when something did happen to put Noank on the front pages of New York newspapers, nobody knew about it until the bride and bridegroom had motored away, as they did immediately after the ceremony, for an unknown destination.

Judge Performs Ceremony.

The ceremony itself, performed by Probate Judge Arthur Anderson of Groton, Conn., consumed but five minutes. The only witnesses were Mrs. Frances Putnam, Mr. Putnam's mother; Charles Faulkner, his uncle; Robert Anderson, the judge's son, and twin black cats.

The cats, coal black and playful, are brother and sister, and as Mr. Putnam slipped a plain platinum ring on Miss Earhart's finger, they rubbed arched backs against his ankles. Then, while Miss Earhart, who has been said to resemble Col. Lindbergh, put on a brown fur coat over a brown suit and light brown blouse, Mr. Putnam telephoned his secretary, Miss Josephine Berger, in New York, announcing the wedding.

Immediately afterward he and Mrs. Putnam bade the others good-by and drove down the winding lane leading from the cream colored, two story house to the main Connecticut highway and the outside world.

"They didn't tell me where they were going, so that I shouldn't be able to tell," said Mrs. Putnam Sr. an hour after the widding.

Retains Name for Business.

Bride and bridegroom—he is 42 and she 32—were extremely happy but undemonstrative, Mrs. Putnam said. Miss Earhart asked to have it made known that she will retain her own name for business and writing purposes. Both will be at their desks in New York on Monday morning—she at the Pan-American Airways company and he in his publishing firm.

Mr. Putnam's marriage was his second, his first wife, Mrs. Dorothy Binney Putnam, having divorced him in Reno, Nev., in December, 1929, on a formal charge of failure to provide.

Miss Earhart was at one time engage to Samuel Chapman, young Boston attorney, but she announced on Nov. 22, 1928, in Cleveland, that the engagement had been broken.

"You never can tell what I will do," she said at the time. "If I was sure of the man, I might get married tomorrow. I am very sudden, you know, and make up my mind in a second."

Met Before Sea Flight.

The former Miss Earhart and Mr. Putnam met shortly before she made her epic flight across the Atlantic to Burryport, Wales, on June 17, 1928.

Upon the return of the aviatrix to this country, she and the publisher made numerous plane trips together around the United States.

Mrs. Putnam before her trans-Atlantic crossing was a social worker in Boston. She learned to fly for "the fun of it." She was prevailed upon by Mr. Putnam to leave her work as director of the Denison settlement center in that city to pursue fame and adventure in the air.

Her flight to Wales was made with the late Wilmer Stultz as pilot, and Lou Gordon, mechanic.

NEW OPERA BY DEEMS TAYLOR IS PRESENTED

New York, Feb. 7.—[U. P.]—Deems Taylor's "Peter Ibbetson," first new American opera to be presented in several years at the Metropolitan, opened to a packed house today. Those singing the leads included Edward Johnson, Lawrence Tibbett, Lucrezia Bori, and Marion Telva.

Two previous efforts by Taylor to produce a suitable successor to his "The King's Henchman" of four years ago failed to work out. The present offering is based on George du Maurier's novel. Constance Collier, who dramatized the novel, did the libretto for the opera. Joseph Urban designed and painted scenery. Direction was by Tullio Serafin.

Baby Believed Dead Is Saved in 4 Hour Fight

A new born child at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Pfahlers, 2207 Pioneer road, Evanston, apparently dead, was resuscitated yesterday morning after an inhalator squad of the Evanston fire department had administered two tanks of oxygen, working for nearly four hours. Mr. Pfahlers, an accountant, summoned Dr. Robert Blessing when the baby arrived and he in turned notified the fire department. The baby was later taken to the Evanston hospital, and placed in an incubator. The child's condition last night was reported as excellent.

KANSAS LOOKS INTO CAMPUS RUM SCANDAL

Eight Arrested Said to Be Students.

Lawrence, Kas., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—After a conference this afternoon of Attorney General Roland Boynton with Dean H. L. Werner, men's student advisor at the university, and Will K. Johns, former Lawrence police chief now associated with the state prohibition enforcement, it was announced that tomorrow there would be a meeting of Kansas university fraternities to discuss the liquor situation.

E. E. TATE. [Acme-P. & A. Photo.]

After the conference Boynton said he had not come here to "investigate the university," but to see if the university authorities were taking steps to solve the liquor violations which had resulted in the arrest of eight purported students.

The attorney general said he was satisfied that Dean Werner was doing all in his power to solve the problem. He expressed disappointment that Chancellor E. H. Lindley had left for Chicago before the conference.

GEORGE TOOLEY JR. [Acme-P. & A. Photo.]

Neither Boynton nor Johns would announce the identity of the eight under arrest, who were booked under fictitious names. That attempts were being made to protect the men was indicated when Dean Werner said none of the eight were Kansas university students, so far as he knew.

Not at Present on Rolls.

He said none of them was enrolled in the university at the present time, although indicating they had been students last semester. Dean Werner declined to state if he was in possession of the students' names, with the exception of George Tooley Jr. and E. E. Tate of Kansas City, who were arrested last Monday at Olathe.

The student adviser expressed doubt as to the proper procedure at the present time. He said he had been informed that for several years there had been considerable drinking at the university between semesters and that he did not know the situation in general was now any worse than in the past. He admitted he was not in possession of concrete information against any particular person.

He further said that the university could not take action against students who were now not enrolled, as the second semester had been under way since Thursday. If the men should reënroll in the university the aspect would be changed.

Appear with Attorneys.

Tooley and Tate appeared at his office while Werner was in conference with the attorney general and the state dry agent. They were accompanied by their fathers, Kansas City business men, and two of their three attorneys, Howard E. Payne of Olathe, former Johnson county attorney, and Walter Thiele, Lawrence lawyer, who represented Kansas university in the Bix Six athletic conference last fall. Payne and Thiele are Kansas university alumni.

Werner took the group to the office of Joseph Granger Brandt, dean of the college of liberal arts, where it is understood a petition was presented to reënroll Tate and Tooley.

The student adviser commented on the case two years ago of a student bootlegger named Turner who, a non-fraternity man, was arrested and sent to prison on charges similar to those preferred against Tate and Tooley. He said not a hand was raised in Turner's defense at the time, but that insertion of the fraternity angle in the case had changed this situation. J. Richard Edelblute, Topeka alumnus of Kansas university, was quoted as being the signer of the bond for four of six men arrested in Topeka.

Michigan Student on Trial.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Feb. 7.—[U. P.]—Efforts to prove that Orie E. Brown, freshman law student from Spencer, Ia., was the source of supply for drinkers on the University of Michigan campus, were resumed this afternoon before Jay H. Payne, justice of the peace.

Fight to Save 17 Adrift on Ice in Storm

Buffalo, N. J., Feb. 7.—(AP)—An ice floe was driving toward Sturgeon point, on the south shore of Lake Erie, tonight, bearing 17 men to what coast guards and veteran sailors of the great lakes believed was almost certain death.

Lashed by a 50 mile an hour wind, blinded by stinging snow, the little group of fishermen swept helplessly toward the rocky promontory which would smash the ice floe to fragments and plunge the men into the icy waters of Lake Erie.

Coast Guards Continue Battle.

Wearied by a 12 hour battle with wind and waves, coast guards launched their boats in the ice strewn waters of Sturgeon point in what might prove a final effort to save the lives of the men who faced death in darkness and cold.

Commander Martin W. Rasmussen of the coast guard said a check of all available information showed 17 men were adrift on the floe.

Twenty others were rescued late this afternoon by coast guards and volunteers; eight reached shore by using a smaller ice floe as a raft and paddling into the teeth of the wind; six others battled their way ashore from one cake of ice to another, while still another reached the Canadian shore after wandering across the broken ice for six miles.

Given Up for Drowned.

One of those who found his way to land had been reported drowned earlier in the day. He brought confirmation of reports that a group remained on a floating island of ice somewhere in the wind lashed waters of the lake.

Coast guards redoubled their efforts but they were handicapped by the biting wind, intense darkness and the blizzard which was sweeping the lake.

The men went adrift in two groups early in the day. Those in the first group were rescued or succeeded in getting ashore.

Just when rescuers were cheered by the thought the elements apparently had been beaten and when hope of complete rescue rose high, a frantic call to the coast guard station brought word of a second floe which had broken away farther to the southwest along the lake front.

Snow and Wind Unabated.

Five boats—two ice skiffs, two tugs, and a cabin cruiser—put out in search of the first group of men. The ice skiffs alternately were slid over the ice or plunged through open lanes of water, while the tugs smashed their way through the thinner ice, breaking a way for the cabin cruiser. Commander Rasmussen held a plane in readiness, manned by two crack flyers, prepared to join the search, but it was unable to take off because of the blizzard.

When the second call for help came in Commander Rasmussen immediately loaded another ice skiff and crew into a truck and sent them racing southwest along the lake shore to begin another rescue attempt.

HIS DEATH ENDS 19 YEARS OF CARE OF INVALID WIFE

Mr. and Mrs. Hans M. Tennyson, 5039 West Chicago avenue, were married forty years ago, when he was an official of the Otis Elevator company. He retired 19 years ago to devote himself to Mrs. Tennyson, who was an invalid. Daily he carried her in his arms from the bed to a wheeled chair.

They were sitting together last night, listening to the radio, and playing a game of cards. Mrs. Tennyson wanted a glass of water. Mr. Tennyson arose and went to the kitchen. He did not return. A table phone was near her chair. Picking it up, she got the number of a nephew, Fred Pritt.

"Something's happened to father," she said.

Mr. Pritt found Mr. Tennyson lying on the kitchen floor, dead of heart disease.

CHARGE MISUSE OF MONEY GIVEN FOR SUFFERERS

$139,000 Raised in Relief Campaign.

In a bill of complaint filed yesterday in the Superior court, Mayor Thompson was charged with failing to disburse $103,855 of the $139,772 contributed in 1927 for the relief of victims of the Mississippi valley flood of that year. The bill also charged Thompson with recently diverting large sums from the $103,855 to political purposes, including his present campaign.

According to the bill not more than $18,500 of the $139,772 reached the sufferers. In addition to the recent diversion, the complaint alleged that other sums were used improperly.

Hasty Denial Is Issued.

Before the full text of the bill and the extent of the attached exhibits became known Thompson issued a statement denying the charges. In it he said he withdrew the relief fund from the Prudential State bank after the president of the bank, George K. Schmidt, then city controller, announced his own candidacy for the mayoralty.

Schmidt announced his candidacy on Jan. 13. According to the bill of complaint and checks and receipts attached to it, all of the $103,855 except $5,635 had been withdrawn from the Prudential bank some time previous. The exhibits indicated that $26,831 was withdrawn on Dec. 18, $25,095 on Dec. 23 and $46,290 on Jan. 8.

Schmidt Makes Statement.

Former Controller Schmidt also issued a statement that he, like his predecessor, Charles C. Fitzmorris, had been ex-officio the treasurer of the fund, had had no authority to disburse it, and had turned it all over by check "about a month ago." He said he did not bring the action.

The accusations against Thompson, who alone had power to draw against the fund, were filed by the law firm of Miller, Wales and Noxon, of which Amos C. Miller is the head. The complainant was Charles S. Smith, described as a contributor of $50 to the fund, whose address was withheld with an explanation that this was thought necessary for his safety.

Repayment of Money Sought.

The complainant asked that all money improperly paid out of the fund be repaid and that the resulting total be given to the Red Cross for the benefit of victims of the present drought.

This plea is based on the ancient doctrine of cy pres, the power of a court of equity to substitute for a particular charity which no longer exists another as nearly like it as possible. Such court action would be preceded by a complete accounting.

Counsel for the complainant said that as soon as the case is assigned for hearing he will ask that it be referred to a master-in-chancery. He said that subpoenas for now unnamed witnesses will be issued, and that the taking of depositions will be begun at once.

Use of Thousands Charged.

One of the charges of the proceeding was that "many thousands of dollars" from the fund have been spent for the Thompson prosperity coupon" scheme, and the recent Thompson flood control conference at the Congress hotel.

Because of that, summonses were issued for several defendants in addition to Thompson. The others are Commissioner of Public Works Richard W. Wolfe; James W. Breen, first assistant corporation counsel; James P. Davis, Bishop A. J. Carey, member of the city civil service commission; the Foreman-State National bank, and the Waterways and Flood Control Association of the Mississippi Valley.

Commissioner Wolfe was named in the bill and the exhibits as the man to whom the money was turned over after its withdrawal from the bank. Thompson, Wolfe, and Breen were named as the incorporators of the Waterway and Flood Control association, which was organized last December.

Davis Is Not Identified.

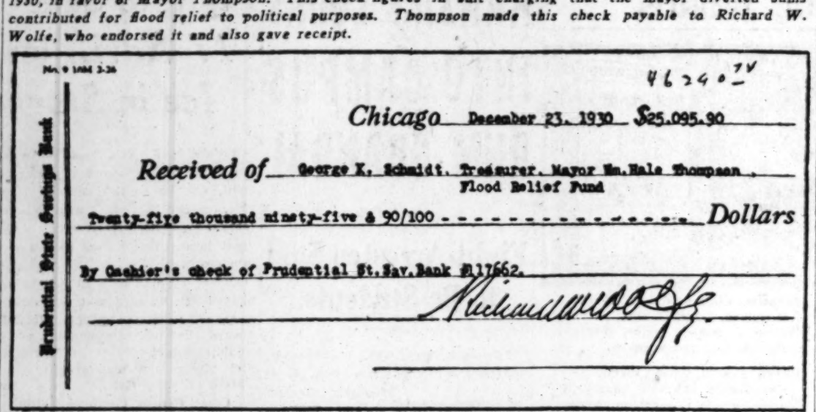
Davis, who was not identified further, was described as the recipient of several monthly payments from the fund, totaling $1,154. Bishop Carey was listed as having received in addition to $5,000 given him for use in the flooded areas, $3,500 in a "personal transaction" between him and Thompson.

The exhibits attached to the bill were alleged to be the record of the major transactions in connection with the fund when, starting with Dec. 18, it was transferred from the Prudential bank, where it lay dormant through most of 1929 and 1930.

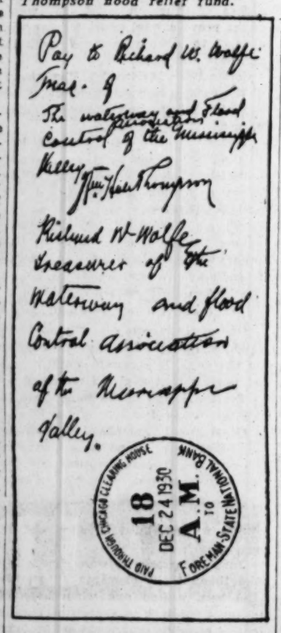
In general these checks and re-

Charge Mayor Diverted $100,000 Flood Relief Funds

Reproduction of cashier's check of the Prudential State Savings bank for $25,095.90 drawn Dec. 23, 1930, in favor of Mayor Thompson. This check figures in suit charging that the mayor diverted sums contributed for flood relief to political purposes. Thompson made this check payable to Richard W. Wolfe, who endorsed it and also gave receipt.



Reproduction of receipt given by Richard W. Wolfe for $25,095.90 cashier's check issued to Thompson by Prudential bank. The receipt was given to George K. Schmidt as treasurer of the "William Hale Thompson flood relief fund."



Endorsements on reverse side of $25,095.90 check, showing that Thompson made check payable to Wolfe as treasurer of "Waterway and Flood Control Association of the Mississippi Valley" and that Wolfe endorsed it as such.

celpts covered the transfer of the money not only from the bank but from the Thompson Flood Relief fund to Commissioner Wolfe as treasurer of the recently created Waterways and Flood Control Association of the Mississippi Valley.

Association Newly Created.

The latter association was incorporated at Springfield on Dec. 16 by Thompson, Wolfe, and Breen, with its office address given as 501 city hall, which is the mayor's office. Shortly before that time Thompson had called his January flood conference.

"Your orator shows," read the bill, "that the corporation known as the Waterways and Flood Control Association of the Mississippi Valley was formed by the express instruction of said defendant Thompson and that the purpose of Thompson in forming the corporation was to provide a means by which Thompson could disburse said trust fund for purposes other than the original use for which the trust funds were contributed."

Record of the Withdrawals.

On Dec. 18 the withdrawal of $36,831.66 was made from the relief fund and paid to Wolfe, according to the records introduced with the suit. The general expenses of the flood conference, which ran from Jan. 12 to Jan. 15, were understood at that time to have been paid by Thompson.

On Dec. 23 the withdrawal of $25,095.90 from the Prudential bank was made. The cashier's check for that amount was made payable to Thompson personally, and the indorsement bore his instructions to pay to Wolfe for the Waterways and Flood Control association. It also carried Wolfe's indorsement in that capacity.

One other document attached to the bill showed the withdrawal of the $46,290.74 from the Prudential bank which was shown in a Wolfe receipt as the final payment closing out the account. That receipt was signed by Wolfe as treasurer of the Thompson flood relief fund, with which his name does not appear in any other official connection in the proceedings.

Check Made Out to Relief Fund.

The check itself had been made out to the relief fund, and the indorsement on the back of it consisted of the typewritten words "William Hale Thompson Flood Relief fund," with no written signature of any kind. It was cashed at the Foreman bank. The check itself does not show that the money was deposited to any account there.

The 19 page bill of compaint included many details concerning the relief fund and opened with a recital of the conditions in the Mississippi valley in April and May of 1927.

At that time Thompson, having just been elected, was on a cruise of triumph down the Mississippi. Two steamers carried the celebrants, who, near Cape Girardeau, Mo., began to receive their impressions of the horrors of the flood.

The extent of the calamity was described in the complaint, the suffering, exposure, starvation, and illness of the victims. The complaint recited that President Coolidge, the governors of many states, the Red Cross and other public agencies issued appeals for help.

Thompson Appeals for Funds.

The complaint declared that Thompson did not coöperate with these agencies but issued his own appeal for donations to his own fund, designating the city controller, then Charles C. Fitzmorris, as treasurer.

"A great calamity," read his proclamation, "has overwhelmed thousands of people in our own section of the country. Devastating floods have driven over 25,000 people from their homes in the Mississippi valley and the danger is constantly growing.

"I know that in the face of this danger . . . the citizens of Chicago will contribute liberally. . . . Therefore, as mayor of the city of Chicago, I call upon the citizens and inhabitants to give promptly and generously in this emergency and I am confident that the response to this urgent call for help will be prompt and ample.

"The need is great. Your response should be immediate."

The bill recited that conditions in the devastated area continued to grow worse, and continued:

"Your orator shows that it was distinctly stated in said proclamation . . . that the purpose of said fund was for immediate relief."

Then the bill set up that among the donations received were a collection from the school children and teachers of $6,623.24 on May 11, 1927, another collection from the same source amounting to $2,023 on May 13, and still a third of $3,123.55 on May 14, and that still other contributions came from the children.

The complaint alleged that all of the $139,772.47 raised constituted a trust fund that could not be used for any other purpose than the immediate relief of the flood victims. It then listed all of the checks issued against the fund during 1927. By number, they were the following:

1. $1,000, mayor of Memphis, Tenn.
2. $2,500, mayor of Cairo, Ill.
3. $5,000, the Rev. A. J. Carey.
4. $5,000, Edward L. Ripley, Boston, treasurer of the Mother Church of Christian Science.
5. $5,000, governor of Arkansas.
6. $5,000, Cardinal Mundelein.
7. $5,000, mayor of New Orleans.
8. $5,000, repayment of advance loaned to fund.
9 to 14. $100 each to mayors of Vermont cities.
15 and 16. Canceled.
17 to 27. $100 each to mayors in Vermont, Massachusetts and New Hampshire.
28. Canceled.
29. $1,000, Mother Vincent.

"Your orator shows that said sum of $31,200 is the total of all flood relief and charitable payments out of the fund collected for Mississippi valley sufferers," the complaint said.

Other Checks Described.

The 1928, 1929 and 1930 checks also were listed. Seven of them were to the unidentified James P. Davis for sums ranging from $150 to $220. Another check was to Bishop Carey for $3,500. The petition charged the Davis payments were "a private arrangement between Thompson and Davis and had nothing to do with the trust fund and were unauthorized."

It also alleged that the payment to Bishop Carey was a "personal transaction" between the minister and Thompson and that both knew they were "liable for repayment."

During 1929 and 1930, the bill said, there was still $103,855.12 in the fund account in the Prudential bank. Then it recited the transfers to Commissioner Wolfe. Summarizing previous withdrawals, it alleged that the total amount used for the authorized purposes of the fund amounted to only $18,500.

The bill charged that the turning over of the big balance within the last two months constituted a "conversion" of the trust fund by Thompson and Wolfe; that Thompson "deliberately retained" the balance in order to use it "so as to place himself before the people of Chicago and the United States as a worker for the lakes to gulf waterway."

"And Thompson," the bill proceeded, "deliberately turned over said trust funds . . . for the further purpose of bringing himself before the people of Chicago and fostering and promoting his candidacy for mayor of the city of Chicago."

As part of this "fostering and promoting," the complaint alleged, Thompson called his January flood conference at the Congress hotel.

"Your orator is informed and believes," the bill went on, "that Thompson and Wolfe proceeded to pay from the trust funds all the expenses of the waterway meeting, and your orator is informed and believes said expenditures amounted to many thousands of dollars."

The petition then took up the Thompson "prosperity coupon" scheme, saying that in connection with it Thompson incurred "expenses for paper, for printing, and other expenses totaling many thousands of dollars."

"Your orator is informed and believes that Thompson has paid from the trust fund in the Foreman-State National bank a number of bills and expenses incurred in the 'prosperity drive,' such payments amounting to many thousands of dollars," the petition declared.

THOMPSON'S STATEMENT

In his statement denying the charges made in Superior court proceedings, Thompson said:

"This charge is absolutely false. I am used to lying attacks, but there is one attack I will not permit or tolerate, and that is an attack on my integrity, and I will hold responsible those who make or circulate such a charge.

"The truth of the matter is that these funds were turned over to the mayor in connection with flood relief, because the people donating the funds did not want to turn the money over to the Red Cross. Moneys contributed to me I turned over to various governors, mayors, other public officials and churches, to spend where the funds would do the most good for emergency relief in the stricken area.

The Controller's Part.

"The controller of the city held these funds in his care. Controller Fitzmorris was helpful in securing a part of these contributions. When George K. Schmidt was appointed controller, these funds passed into his hands, and he deposited them in the Prudential bank, of which he was president.

"After the expenditures as indicated above were made, word came to me that in the Negro districts of the stricken area the Red Cross made the Negroes sign a note before they would give them any money for relief, which prompted me to dispatch into those districts Bishop Carey to make an investigation, and when he reported to me that this condition was true I authorized him to make investigation and recommendations, and he did, and we sent the Negro churches contributions of from $100 to $1,000 because the Red Cross was discriminating against the Negro.

"Further Use Unnecessary."

"After Bishop Carey came home, at his suggestion I sent other Negro investigators into other Negro districts in other states, and a further contribution was made until the time arrived when I believed it would be unnecessary to use these funds further and it would be wasteful just to spread them around after the people had been cared for sufficiently by the governments and the Red Cross in their respective states.

"This fund has remained in the hands of the city controller from its inception until the time of George K. Schmidt's resignation, and the balance of the fund, amounting to approximately $90,000, which I have had invested in government and other gilt-edge securities, which has earned several thousand dollars in interest, was turned over to Richard W. Wolfe, treasurer of the Waterway and Flood Control association of the Mississippi valley, to be expended for the purpose of securing further benefits to insure the people of the valley against recurring floods. This fund is now in the Foreman State National bank.

"He who charges me with other than the strictest honesty in the handling of these sacred funds is a cheap political falsifier and will be sued by me, not for political effect, but to punish those who try to destroy for political reasons the names of honest men, and I will follow this suit until they are punished sufficiently to be a warning against any other crook who sees fit to attack the integrity of the mayor of Chicago.

"It is rather interesting to me that Miller, Gorham & Wales, who are personal attorneys for George K. Schmidt, candidate for Republican nomination for mayor, bring this political attack."

BURGLARS RAID EVANSTON STORE.

GUNMEN STOP A COP, USE HIS AUTO, THEN GIVE HIM A $20 TIP

Lewistown, Ill., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—State Highway Patrolman James Bainter of this city was held up today while traveling his beat on route No. 31, three miles south of Lewistown, by two highwaymen, believed to be two of the men who held up the Camden, Ill., bank several days ago. The third member of the bank party is in jail at Springfield.

Bainter was returning home from Rushville when he saw an auto in the ditch and two men working to get it out. He stopped and was getting out of his auto when he was ordred to hold up his hands by one of the bandits. The officer was disarmed and a sawed off shotgun in his auto was taken.

He was forced to enter his car with a bandit on eich side and the party came to Lewistown in search of a wrecking car. Bainter twice was taken to a garage and driven about the business section of this city with a gun pressed against his side. Later a wrecking car was sent to the place where the car was in the ditch and the car was pulled back on the pavement.

The bandits took Bainter with them in their car. After they had gone some distance down the highway they gave Bainter nine 45 caliber cartridges, offered him a drink of liquor, pushed a $20 bill into his coat pocket, and set him free.

BREAD STRIKERS BATTLE POLICE; FIVE ARRESTED

Crowd Hoots Injunctions and 10 Cent Loaves.

Two women, two men and a boy were arrested by flivver squads of the West North avenue station late yesterday and face possible contempt of court proceedings for picketing bakeries which had obtained injunctions against being picketed by "striking consumers."

The prisoners before their arrest had formed part of a line of about 75 persons, mostly women and children, who marched back and forth in front of bakeries in the Humboldt park district, shouting, "We want six cent union bread!" and "Down with injunctions!" The bakeries sell their bread at 10 cents a loaf.

Police Car Charges Paraders.

Policemen attempted to scatter the paraders and onlookers in front of the Northwestern Baking company, 2445 Division street. One of the squad cars was driven on the sidewalk, scattering the picketers, who as quickly formed again and resumed their marching and shouting. They carried posters on which was proclaimed in both Jewish and English, "Six cent union bread—Pay no more."

The policemen did their work good-naturedly. Twice they caught the arms of young men demonstrators, only to be leaped upon by women strikers who struck and clawed at the policemen until they retired a few paces.

Five Held by Police.

At the police station the women prisoners gave their names as Lily Miller of 1243 North Spaulding avenue, and Molly Sladine, 1501 North Campbell avenue. They were taken to the women's quarters at the West Chicago avenue station. The men arrested said they were Nick Michael, 3118 West Division street, and Morris Klugman, 2609 Potomac avenue. The report expressed deep concern that at a moment when "this grave situation" had apparently been remedied a "new danger of the first magnitude had appeared as the result of the manufacture on a very large scale of morphine and heroin in a country, Turkey, which is not a member of the league of nations or a party to the opium conventions."

The report mentioned a letter shown to the opium committee by the representative from the United States, J. Kenneth Caldwell, from a Turkish manufacturing concern to an American firm. It offered to supply whatever narcotic drugs were required at prices varying according to whether the delivery was effected under the conditions laid down in the Geneva convention or independently of any convention.

CUBANS EXTEND BAN ON LIBERTY FOR NINETY DAYS

HAVANA, Feb. 7.—(AP)—The government today ordered a renewal for ninety days of the decree suspending constitutional guarantees in Cuba. The decree was signed yesterday before President Machado left town for the week-end.

This is the third time Cuban constitutional guarantees have been suspended, the action this time taken on authority recently voted the president by the legislature. The decree revokes the right of public assembly, restricts the press and establishes virtual martial law.

The renewal of the suspension was decided upon, it was explained, even though resistance to the police and attacks on private property which resulted in the previous suspension had ceased.

Young Mother Fights for Beauty Honors

'MISS PARIS' LOSES CROWN BECAUSE SHE'S A MOTHER

Proud Beauty Plans Damage Suit.

BY EDMOND TAYLOR.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Feb. 7.—The dynastic crisis precipitated by the disqualification of "Miss Paris of 1931" on the grounds that she was not a Parisienne and should not be called "Miss" since she is the mother of a four months old baby, went into its third day today with a number of sensational developments brewing.

The courts must eventually decide whether the beauty committee acted rightfully or wrongfully in stripping Mlle. Viviane Ortmans of her title, as she has announced she will file a heavy damage suit. Meanwhile the press is taking up cudgels in behalf of the young mother.

Columnist Calls Her Patriotic.

The famous columnist, Clement Vautel, in today's Journal, took the view that, at a time when the birth rate is dropping at an alarming rate, it is hardly right to disqualify a young girl from representing Paris in beauty contests merely because she performed a patriotic duty without going through the necessary formalities.

M. Vautel's plea was made with his tongue in his cheek, but La Liberte this afternoon seriously came out with a front page article launching a campaign in favor of the former "Miss Paris." La Liberté proposes that the city of Paris become godfather to Viviane's baby, which, it says, would be a just recompense for her losing the title.

Admits She's a Mother.

Mlle. Ortmans, who is a tall, willowy brunette with soft eyes and a candid expression, admitted to reporters that she was not born in Paris, and that she is the mother of a four months old baby. She said that she informed the beauty committee of these facts before her election last week, and that the committee did not consider these objections serious.

This is the second time that a committee of merchants, which chooses Paris beauty queens, has gotten into trouble. "Miss Paris of 1929" obtained a court judgment against the committee on the grounds that she wasted valuable time in being queen. The present case is being given tremendous attention by the papers.

ROB MERCHANT, WIFE OF $485.

Three bandits held up Nicholas Crandon and his wife, proprietors of a grocery store at 7508 Belmont avenue, yesterday, and robbed the cash register of $485.

STABS HIS NIECE TO DEATH AFTER DRINKING PARTY

As the aftermath of a drinking party, Mrs. Belle Gilbert, 35 years old, was stabbed to death yesterday afternoon by her uncle, Arthur Cramer, 66 years old, in the rooms they shared at 1441 West Adams street. Cramer slashed his own throat, but at the Bridewell hospital the wound was found to be superficial.

The party was in celebration of the departure for New York of Mrs. Gilbert's son by a former marriage, Donald A. Loeb, 18 years old. Guests included Mike Furlong, 37 years old, 3716 Lexington street, and Mary Ryan.

Furlong said they ran out of liquor and he went to get some more. When he returned Mrs. Gilbert was dead and her uncle bleeding in a chair. The Ryan woman was lying on the bed in a stupor. Cramer told the police that "my niece picked on me all the time for not getting a job, and I couldn't stand it any longer."

PUPIL WRECKS PILOT AND HIS FLYING SCHOOL

O'Carroll Is Minus Teeth; Three Men in Jail.

Not only has the airplane taxi business of Pierce O'Carroll gone completely smash, but Mr. O'Carroll has lost all his front teeth. Until yesterday Mr. O'Carroll, who lives at 6332 South Kilpatrick street, was a competitor in the flying business of Dewey B. Biggs, 6791 South Chicago avenue.

The situation, however, is not altogether rosy for Mr. Biggs, for he spent last night in a cell at the detective bureau, along with Christ Hedd, 1944 East 70th street, and Edward Kennedy, alias Jack Casey, 6244 Dorchester avenue.

None of these eventualities was foreseen a month ago by either Mr. O'Carroll or Mr. Biggs, for they were then pals as well as partners in the airplane taxi business at the municipal airport. In addition, there was the flying school, of which Mr. O'Carroll was the professor pilot.

He Breaks Partnership.

About that time Prof. O'Carroll had a chance to buy a dual control plane cheap. He quit Mr. Biggs and opened his own taxi business and flying school three hangars away. Customers came. Prof. O'Carroll prospered. Mr. Biggs complained of the depression.

It was on Jan. 17 that a new pupil appeared at Prof. O'Carroll's hangar. He said he was Jack Casey. Would the professor teach him to fly? He would. Things went nicely until Jan. 23. Professor and pupil, at the dual controls, took off. The ship rose to a height of 100 feet, then went into a sideslip and crashed to earth, a wreck. That was when Prof. O'Carroll lost teeth. Mr. Casey, who escaped injury, disappeared.

Three Are Arrested.

Prof. O'Carroll got to thinking about it. So did the police when he told them of a private investigation he had conducted. Ensued yesterday the arrests of Mr. Biggs, Mr. Hedd, and Mr. Kennedy, alias Casey. At the detective bureau last night Kennedy was said to have confessed thus:

"I was hired by Hedd, who works for Biggs, to crack up O'Carroll's ship. I got $50 for the job, but nothing extra for knocking out his teeth. I know how to fly better than O'Carroll. I'm sorry now I did it."

The three were charged with malicious mischief. They will be arraigned in Municipal court tomorrow morning.

And Now Radio Invades Old Church Rite in Arabia

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

DAMASCUS, Feb. 7.—Sultan Ibn Saud has caused serious unemployment among hundreds of muezzins throughout Arabia, according to a local paper. Their duty has been to call the faithful to prayer, but Ibn Saud has replaced them with loudspeakers. Instead of the sweet voiced muezzins calling five times daily between sunrise and sunset, a prayer call in strident mechanical tones is now broadcast from Mecca, where only the official muezzin is left with a job.

U. S. GIRL FINDS PRINCE OF WALES "CHARMING MAN"

But Thinks Brother Better Dancer.

PANAMA CITY, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Miss Eleanor Nichols, the American girl who last night captivated the prince of Wales at a dinner given in his honor at the Union club, thinks he "is one of the most charming men I have ever met," but considers Prince George a better dancer.

Miss Nichols, who is the daughter of Commander Newton Lord Nichols, in charge of the Balboa naval radio station, and Mrs. Nichols, was the center of interest in Panama City and Balboa today, for the prince of Wales gave her his undivided attention as they danced beneath a tropic moon shining over the Bay of Panama.

Bewildered by Attentions.

She had hardly returned home from the dance with her father and mother when the telephone bell and door bell began to ring—and they have been ringing ever since. Droves of press photographers went out to the home, and London newspapers even cabled for photographs. She had to have new photographs made, for the only one at the Nichols home was a simple portrait made five years ago.

Although Miss Nichols appeared as much at ease dancing with the prince last night as did he, the attentions showered upon her today were slightly bewildering.

"It's so silly," she commented. "Why, the prince of Wales has danced with hundreds of girls before. But I think that he's one of the most charming men I ever met. He isn't a bit offish, he talks slang, and one never would think, just by meeting and talking with him, that he is anything but just one of the nicest young men imaginable."

Speaks Spanish Slowly.

During his conversation with Miss Nichols the prince practiced some of the Spanish he learned in preparation for his South American trip.

"He speaks Spanish rather slowly," the girl continued, "but I can understand him much better than the people here who rattle it off so fast."

Then as to the dancing:

"And he's an awfully nice dancer," she went on, "but I believe Prince George is the better of the two. He doesn't have as much to say, though."

Miss Nichols was seated with her parents last night when one of the royal equerries came over and invited her to sit at the table occupied by the princes. She was presented to Prince George, who danced with her. Hardly had she sat down again when the prince of Wales walked over and asked for the next dance—"without sending a messenger or anything," was the way the delighted girl put it.

BISHOP CANNON EXONERATED BY CHURCH ELDERS

Charges Are Unfounded, They Decide.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Bishop James Cannon Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, was completely exonerated tonight of all charges lodged against him. The 12 traveling elders of his church, who have spent the last five days hearing accusations, which, it is understood, touched his private as well as his clerical character, returned their verdict tonight, declaring the charges insufficiently well grounded to warrant a trial before the general conference.

The understanding is that the verdict of the twelve was unanimous, and Bishop W. N. Ainsworth, who presided at the hearing, declared that the exoneration covered all charges, of which there were six, made up of 48 specifications.

Second Marriage a Factor.

Certain of these charges, it is asserted, had to do with Bishop Cannon's speculations in the stock market; others concerned his political activites against former Gov. Smith during the 1928 campaign, in which he raised the "Rum and Romanism" issue. Others, and the most serious, are said have touched upon certain circumstances surrounding his second marriage.

Bishop Cannon was not on hand at the Mount Vernon Place Methodist church, where the hearing was held, to hear the verdict. He had returned to his bed in the Sibley hospital. Word of the elders' decision was transmitted to him over the telephone by his son, James Cannon III.

Cannon Refuses to Talk.

It was nearly ten thirty o'clock when Bishop Ainsworth appeared and gave out a statement, which declared:

"A committee of investigation in the case of Bishop James Cannon Jr., concluded its hearing in Washington today. The committee found no trial necessary."

Beyond that, he would say nothing further than that the verdict had included all the allegations and that it had his complete approval. Bishop Cannon refused to make a statement.

CITIZENS' POLICE BOARD URGES A CAPABLE MAYOR

Report of Survey Asserts Corruption Rules.

Election of the right kind of mayor was designated by the citizen's police committee yesterday as a first essential if Chicago is to have a police department able to cope with the city's crime.

BRUCE SMITH. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

"Oppression, futility, and corruption — corruption everywhere!" said the first chapter of the committee's report, made public in part, in a general discussion of police conditions. At another point the report declared that "the mayor of Chicago and he alone can dictate the kind and quality of police administration which the city secures," adding that the police problem has usually been settled at the ballot box and there it remains.

Report of Long Survey.

The report was prepared by Bruce Smith of the National Institute of Public Administration, director for the committee. The committee was formed in January, 1929, and has conducted a survey of the police department covering more than a year.

Leonard D. White, professor of political science at the University of Chicago, is chairman of the operating committee of the citizens' group. Walter Dill Scott, president of Northwestern university, heads the supervisory committee, and Elmer T. Stevens is head of the advisory committee composed of 48 citizens and aldermen.

Others identified with the report include Frank J. Loesch, president of the Chicago crime commission; Prof. Andrew A. Bruce of Northwestern university, president of the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, and A. Leon Green, dean of the Northwestern university law school.

Sweeping Charges Made.

Although the report concerns principally the administrative functioning of the police department and does not purport to deal with questions of corruption, its opening chapters constitute a sweeping indictment of the present administration and recommend drastic changes in the whole police system.

Facts uncovered by the commitee's investigators, said the report, "show that the police force as a whole is handicapped by a defective organization, that the administrative leader seldom or never has an opportunity to lead, and that the rank and file is demoralized, the plant and equipment, with few exceptions, either unsuitable or inadequate, the effective strength ineffectively distributed, and the whole permeated through and through with political influence and a sense of failure."

Some Suggestions Tried.

Former Police Commissioner Russell coöperated in the formation of the citizens' committee and gave it his full support, according to the report. Before his resignation in June, 1930, he put some of its recommendations into effect.

When his successor, John Alcock, took office as acting commissioner, the report said, the new practices were discarded and the committee was not invited to continue its work. The period since June, 1930, has been occupied with preparation of the report, the first two chapters of which were made public yesterday. Other chapters will be published within a few days.

The committee declared its unanimous opinion that an increased police force is necessary, but that it would be worse than futile to hire more policemen until the present abuses in the system are corrected.

Many Devices Employed.

"Many devices have been employed in an effort to make the police force a more reliable instrument," said the report.

"Yet there is little to indicate that these were honest efforts. Certainly the much advertised 'crime drives' of the last year or two have long since broken down.

"The 'showups' at police headquarters each Sunday afternoon have degenerated into monotonous routine.

"While this farce is being played, the official police list of prominent gangsters against whom vagrancy charges are to be filed is found in the possession of a Capone bondsman; warrants for the arrest of so-called 'big shots' are lost for weeks, then reappear and are distributed for execution without comment. Oppression, futility, and corruption—corruption everywhere."

Reorganization Plan Told.

Three basic principles of a new organization plan were set forth as a sailing chart for the administrator of the future. These are administrative leadership and a unified command; fewer major units; and a regrouping of related activities.

Under Russell there were 19 units responsible to the commissioner, and Alcock increased these to 45. The committee proposes that they shall be reduced to 8.

BOY KILLS CRIPPLED LAD AT PLAY; TAKES VICTIM TO CHURCH

West Chicago avenue police summoned last night to the Holy Trinity Polish Catholic church, 1118 Noble street, found Andrew Radecki, 15 years old, 1230 Holt street, lying on the basement steps shot through the heart. He was wearing his Boy Scout uniform. A revolver was beside the body.

The police thought the boy had killed himself until they learned that Andrew was a cripple who could not walk without crutches. His crutches were found near the body. Then Agnes Snyder, 15 years old, and Mary Wojik, 14, told the police that Andrew had been carried there by Walter Micinski, 17 years old, 1308 Chapin street. Walter had then run away, they said.

Walter, found at his home, said they were playing Indian with a revolver, when it was accidentally discharged, while he [Walter] was holding it. He took Andrew to the church, he said, because he thought he should have a priest. Andrew was still alive when he left him, the boy said. He ran away, he said, because he feared "Andrew might snitch on me." Walter and his 14 year old brother, Stanley, were taken to the juvenile home.

CLEANER DENIES RACKET CHARGES AFTER TWO RAIDS

E. A. Fink, president of the Peacock Cleaners and Dyers, two plants of which were raided by state's attorney's police on Friday night after it became known Hirschie Miller, firebrand of the cleaning price war of five years ago, was connected with the firm, last night denied all charges of racketeering and "muscling" and termed the complaints of the Master Cleaners and Dyers' association a retaliation for conducting an open shop and refusing to sign a price fixing agreement.

"We have refused to sign any agreement and have had nothing to do with any labor organization," Mr. Fink stated. "As a result, the union and the association of owners have charged us with inciting a price cutting war. They also charge we have placed our business in the hands of Miller to force them to buy us out. We have 18 shops with an investment of $65,000 and any authority is invited to inspect our books at any time.

"Miller is working on a salary as night superintendent and has no investment in the business. We are not for sale at any price."

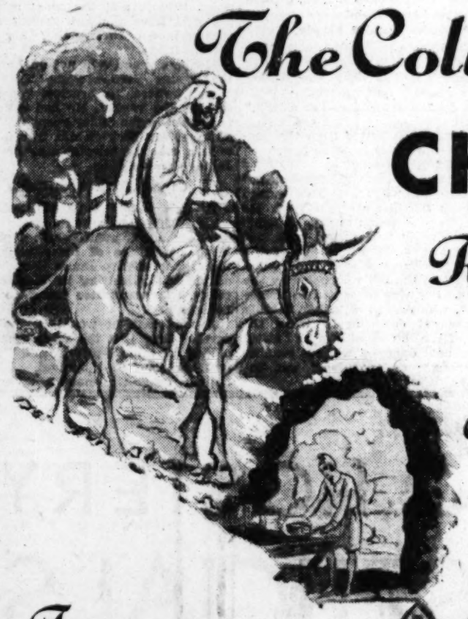
The Columbus of CHEESE Rides with His Discovery



FROM the early Arabian herdsman who discovered that the milk he carried in his sheepskin bag had turned into a thick cheeselike substance, cheese has been an important industry in every country. The limestone caves in France give us one variety—the skillful Swiss discovered other cheese making methods, the Dutch another, the Italians others, and so on until we have a variety of over 19 different kinds of cheese.

Early American cheese making dates back to the colonists, bringing their cheese making arts with them. In 1851, a factory was started in New York and though the "Cheddar" method of England was used, the cheese was known as "American" or "Herkimer County" Cheese.

Owing to its splendid attributes as a dairy country, Wisconsin soon attracted the cheese makers, and today Wisconsin leads the nation in cheese-production.

National Tea Co. Food Stores, close to these Middle West's dairy lands, are able to supply you with a fine variety of mellow flavored cheese at a saving.

At our sources of supply, cheese is allowed to ripen until it is ready for your table. Whether it be mild American, strong American, Brick or the modern daintily packaged cheese foods for your table, baking or cooking, you will find a complete variety at your nearest National Tea Co. BONDS TOTALING $54,600,000 ON PRIMARY BALLOT

$36,000,000 Canal Issue Leads List.

Public improvement bond issues totalling $54,600,000 will be placed before the voters of Chicago and Cook county on Feb. 24 when they go to the polls for the mayoralty and aldermanic primary.

Four proposals for issues aggregating $36,000,000 will be submitted by the sanitary district while the south park board will submit seven proposals for issues amounting to $13,100,000. The Lincoln park board will submit one proposal for a $3,000,000 issue and the city one for a $2,500,000 issue.

In addition, the ballots within the city will carry a proposal for ratification of legislation providing court hearings in aldermanic primary contests.

Canal Bonds for Sewage Treatment.

Neither the county, the west park board, nor any of the smaller park districts will submit bond issues in February. Although the county board had contemplated asking for a $2,000,000 issue for emergency poor relief it decided instead to ask the legislature for authority to issue the bonds without a referendum.

All of the sanitary district bonds are for work upon sewage treatment plants in conformity with the United States Supreme court decree which requires all sewage to be treated by Dec. 31, 1938. Trustees of the district say this work is mandatory and that defeat of the bonds would force them to appeal to the legislature.

The sanitary district proposals for sewage treatment plants are:

West side works	$11,000,000
Calumet works	20,300,000
Southwest works	3,100,000
North side works	1,600,000

South park voters will have the longest series of bond issues to vote upon. The seven south park issues cover twice that many improvements, including lake front, small park, street and bridge improvements. They are as follows:

Lake front extension	$2,610,000
Small park improvements	1,915,000
Jackson park piers	475,000
Southeastern boulevard	2,000,000
Marquette road, St. Lawrence avenue, and Oakwood boulevard	1,000,000
Yates avenue	1,600,000
Randolph street viaduct	3,500,000

The lake front extension issue would pay the initial cost of continuation of the lake front improvement from 67th street to the Indiana state line and rebuild the 102d street pier in Calumet park.

Small parks improvements in the second issue would be allotted for buildings, swimming pools, shelters, and equipment, as follows: Madden park, $450,000; Marquette park, $460,000; Mann park, $125,000; Seventh Ward park, $450,000; Washington park, $150,000; Jackson park, $105,000; Palmer park, $15,000; Foster park, $15,000, and a proposed new park, $145,000.

Each of the three street bond issues would pay for the widening, paving, and other improvements for the thoroughfares listed, while the Randolph street viaduct issue would go toward the south park board's share of the cost of the viaduct, being built jointly with the Illinois Central railroad.

The single issue for the Lincoln park district for $3,000,000 would go for continuation of the lake front extension work on the north side. It would pay for extension of the outer drive and for the reclamation and improvement of land along the lake shore.

The city issue of $2,500,000 is to widen State street from the river to Chicago avenue to make way for the construction of the subway.

Should the proposition concerning aldermanic contests be carried the vote would approve an act passed by the legislature in 1927 allowing candidates to contest in court the February election counts. Under the present law the two highest candidates go into the April runoff and others do not have a right to contest their standing in court.

LYLE'S CAMPAIGN WILL SWING INTO LOOP TOMORROW

Four Big Rallies Slated for This Week.

BY PARKE BROWN.

With only a fortnight left before the mayoralty primaries, backers of Judge Lyle hope to have the public regard the next seven days as "Lyle week." They are planning to let their candidate hit out hard at a number of big meetings.

Last week, observers agree, was pretty much of a "Thompson week." Starting on Monday Mayor Thompson, who had been under blankets up to that time, staged a series of meetings in loop theaters centering in what he called his "jackass show"—a parade of a donkey, a mule and a horse carrying actors representing himself, Judge Lyle and Ald. Arthur F. Albert.

It is admitted by opposition managers that his showmanship brought a surge to the Thompson candidacy that carried it up toward the top at least for the time being; but they said yesterday that, with the novelty worn off the "jackass show" and no more politico-circus stunts scheduled, his strength will slump again.

Open Way for Lyle Week.

The Albert campaign directors say they are reserving their candidate for a spurt in the final week. United States Senator Deneen returned to Chicago from Washington for the week end and addressed his workers yesterday afternoon, but the Albert headquarters said that no large meetings or special speeches are planned for this week. They are waiting for "the breaks."

With this situation ahead, with the expectation that Thompson will subside to some extent and that Albert will hold back, the Lyle people are counting materially this week upon two big night gatherings and two noon meetings in the loop, all of which are to be in charge of the business men supporting the candidate.

Tomorrow Judge Lyle will address a night meeting at the Apollo theater. On Tuesday night he will be the chief guest at an anti-crime dinner at the Hotel LaSalle arranged by Dr. John Dill Robertson and the Chicago Business Men's Republican league. The dates and places of the noon meetings have not been announced, but it is expected they will be at the Appolo on Wednesday and Friday.

Battle Lines Are Drawn.

At this stage it is believed that the principal organization lines are about as clearly established as they will be before the polls are opened. There may be some last minute deals of importance but the positions of all the important leaders are definitely known now.

The latest development of this sort came in the form of more open activity for Judge Lyle by the local branch of Gov. Emmerson's organization. His lieutenants in Cook county, headed by President W. R. James of the West park board, became energetic in their efforts in his behalf. Employés of the park boards felt the effects of their activity.

On the other hand former state employés under the Small administration have lined up with Thompson in another Thompson-Small deal believed to show convincingly that the former governor is a candidate now against Emmerson with every intention to run again if Thompson wins. Small's friends go so far as to say he is in the race even if Thompson loses.

Gossip of Other Deals.

There has been gossip that other old deals have been revived in this campaign. One of them mentioned was that Small and Deneen had come together again behind Ald. Albert.

Another was that Small or some of his representatives had attempted negotiations with Deneen in an effort to throw some of the support now behind Albert over to Thompson as one of a Small-for-governor and Deneen-for-senator combination in 1932 with Thompson aiding both.

There has been nothing like tangible evidence produced in support of these rumors except that the acceptance of the Thompson-Small deal is general in all camps. Whether it includes a United States senatorship angle has not been disclosed.

In his evening meetings, Judge Lyle continued to stress the crime situation.

"The chief executive of Chicago," he said, "again admits that he cannot stop crime and tells the public that no man can stop lawlessness. That apparently has been his belief during his twelve years as mayor.

"Every home loving citizen should pray that such a statement be untrue. To admit it is to surrender Chicago to Terry Druggan, Bugs Moran, Al Capone, and their ilk. It is to admit that the 28 public enemies are bigger than the city government. It is in effect an admission that there are more bad people in Chicago than there are good people, and that would be absolutely false."

Deneen Hits Both Ways.

Senator Deneen addressed his workers in private session, but a manuscript of his speech issued later contained a mild attack on Thompson and a more extended one on Judge Lyle. The latter was an attack on Judge Lyle's record as an alderman and as a judge.

At noon 200 Deneen women workers met at the Morrison where they were addressed by Senator Deneen, Roy O. West, Ald. Albert, and James A. Kearns, candidate for city treasurer.

Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett Married

New York, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Frances Goodrich, actress and writer, and Albert Hackett, actor and author, were married today at the municipal building. Miss Goodrich, who is 36, was formerly the wife of Hendrik Willem Van Loon. Hackett collaborated on the recent stage success, "Up Pops the Devil."

BUTLER CHARGES LIKELY TO OMIT NAME OF DUCE

Washington, D. C., Feb. 8.—(Special.)—Reports are current that the navy has worded the court martial charges against Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler so as to avoid, if possible, bringing Premier Mussolini's name into the trial. This could be done by restricting the allegations to the principles of discipline involved.

There are indications that if this attempt has been made it will be resisted by Gen. Butler in an effort to have all the facts and circumstances presented.

Should international questions threaten to enter the trial in a manner embarrassing to the government, it is believed by officials that the court will consider holding closed sessions during that phase of the proceedings. Gen. Butler is expected to insist on an open session throughout.

One of the many complications in the court martial is causing quiet amusement here. It has come out that Maj. Henry Leonard, counsel for the marine officer, is a brother-in-law of the wife of John W. Garrett, ambassador to Italy.

13 INSANE WHO FLED HOSPITAL ARE STILL LOOSE

Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 7.—(AP)—Thirteen inmates of the Central State hospital for the Insane, who escaped during a fire late last night, remained at large today.

Dr. W. S. Farmer, hospital superintendent, said all were "potentially dangerous."

When the fire broke out, six hundred inmates were released. Hospital guards attempted to keep them bunched as closely as possible, but despite their efforts 24 escaped. Eleven were recaptured.

STATUE OF EARLY WOMAN RAISES STORM IN LONDON

Epstein's Work Called Fit for Monkey House.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—(AP)—A heated controversy is taking place in the British newspapers over Jacob Epstein's colossal new marble figure of a primitive woman, entitled "Genesis."

JACOB EPSTEIN.

There was some praise, but far more expressions of distaste and repugnance.

The controversial statue is a huge carving of a woman nearing motherhood. Critics say she is entirely misshapen, cumbersome in body, and with heavy, brooding Mongolian features.

"Mr. Epstein's interpretation of what was 'in the beginning,'" said the Times, "must be regarded as an acceptance of the Darwinian theory, for his conception of the 'mother of mankind' has more in common with the denizens of a monkey house than with the polished Eves of academic sculpture."

Far from Comely.

Under the headline "We Are Not Amused" the dispatch says: "The ladies with whom Epstein's muse keeps company are far from comely. It is safe to say that neither Hollywood nor Elstree [the English film city] impresarios of the world's sweethearts will have any use for the type.

"In New York they might call the unsightly dame a 'wow.' The lady whom Epstein has chiseled under the label 'Genesis' would make an indifferent squaw for a Neanderthal man. But even a cave man would bar her as a member of his beauty chorus."

The critic of the Observer, however, sees more in the statute than many of his colleagues.

"If an explorer were to discover Mr. Epstein's 'Genesis' in an African jungle tomorrow," he writes, "he would stand before it in respectful wonder. But when the same man discovers it instead of Leicester galleries, he is more likely to mutter one word, 'disgusting.'"

A Bit of Praise.

The Manchester Guardian, however, urged violent critics not to be too sure that Epstein is wrong. The Guardian critic said: "The figure is primeval, almost a Simian woman, stark and expressive with something terrible in it like birth itself, transcending the properties of life. The face has blind dignity and pathos."

The critic sees the sculptor wavering in his treatment, but he adds: "It has its own strange beauty and has a presence that would make most modern sculpture seem trivial beside it. Epstein has given us a conception of the primeval mother of the scientist to set beside the 'Eve' of the classics. There surely is room for it in the world of art."

"Coarse and Repellent."

The Telegraph's critic finds the statue coarse and repellant and suggests that it be removed from the gallery as "unsuitable for public exhibition."

Meanwhile Epstein, smiling, refuses to answer his critics, saying: "I did not carve this for them, I carved my idea."

Statue of "Maidenhood" by Jacob Epstein, sculptor, which caused uproar years ago in London similar to the one yesterday centering around his new work, "Genesis."

U. S. TO ORDER ITS BOURBON AND RYE SUPPLY FOR 1931

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Any modifications made in the regulations covering the issuance of liquor prescriptions by physicians are not expected to cause any radical increase in the amount of medicinal spirits consumed during the next year, the treasury department disclosed today.

Dr. James M. Doran, director of the industrial alcohol bureau, announced that whisky production during 1931 will be held down to 2,000,000 gallons, the same as last year.

Permits are to be granted at once to three bourbon distilleries in Kentucky and three rye whisky distilleries in Pennsylvania. Two-thirds of the new whisky will be bourbon.

DISCUSS PLANS FOR NEAR EAST RAILWAY SYSTEM

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Feb. 7.—Meetings have been arranged between representatives of the four near eastern powers, including Turkey, Persia, Iraq, and Arabia, to take place early in April for the purpose of discussing the opening up of railway communications in the near east.

A railroad from Smyrna to Kabul running through Turkey, Persia, and Afghanistan, with branches through Arabia and Mesopotamia and down to the Arabian sea, is being planned.

German, Italian, and Russian interests are said to be behind the scheme financially, and the contracts for construction are to be divided between these three countries.

RITCHIE CLUBS IN 13 STATES ASK 1932 CANDIDACY

Expect Organization Soon to Be Nation-Wide.

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Within three months, it was announced here today, branch organizations will exist in forty-eight states of the "Ritchie-for-President league." Friends of Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland are behind the movement. Lawrence Lockwood, the general secretary, a Baltimorean, announced tonight that organizations had been formed in four additional states within the last two weeks, bringing the total number already in to thirteen.

GOV. ALBERT C. RITCHIE. [Harris & Ewing.]

Organizations announced today included Michigan, Massachusetts, Illinois and Georgia.

Mr. Lockwood was a member of the state Democratic finance committee which backed Al Smith in Maryland when Smith ran against Hoover.

Pennsylvanian Is President.

The national president of the Ritchie league is Edward A. Gabeler of Philadelphia, and the New York leader is William A. Powell, Mr. Lockwood said.

"The general idea," he said, "is to perfect 48 organizations composed of business men and representative citizens who believe in the fitness of Albert C. Ritchie for the office of President."

Irwin N. Nason, a Chicago attorney, has been appointed general chairman of the Illinois branch of the league.

Movement Two Months Old.

The entire Maryland Democracy is back of Gov. Ritchie, the only man in the history of Maryland who has been elected four times to the governor's chair. From reports received, the Ritchie leaguers believe that Ritchie already is regarded as a serious contender for the presidential nomination to be made by the Democratic party next year. The plan to formulate a national organization got under way less than two months ago.

Secretary Lockwood said a quiet campaign was now being conducted on the Pacific coast and among midwest states. Reports are expected within two weeks.

SAYS MEDIUMS GET 100 MILLION ANNUALLY IN U. S.

Curiosity and credulity about the powers of touted mediums and the occult adventures of their seance rooms costs the American public approximately $100,000,000 annually, members of the Catholic Women's league were informed yesterday. Dr. Miriam Rooney, psychologist, formerly of the child labor bureau at Washington and now a member of the faculty of Loyola university, addressed the organization at a meeting in the Fine Arts building.

"Here is one business, at least, that seems not to have suffered from any economic depression," she commented. "We know of one medium in New York who receives from $25 to $100 a day at the present time for her advice about business affairs. There is also a psychoanalyst in Chicago's loop, I am told, who receives $100 a treatment from young society women—the treatment consisting of lying on a soft couch in a semi-darkened room and unburdening one's soul to the authority.

"For these apparently supernatural powers there is a perfectly natural psychological explanation. Mediums work mainly through a self imposed hypnotic trance during which they reveal what is in their subconscious minds."

Three Reported Indicted in Gotham Bank Failure

New York, Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Indictments naming three men in connection with the collapse of the Bank of United States, were being prepared this afternoon by the indictment bureau of the district attorney's office, it was reported unofficially.

It was rumored that the indictments would be handed up to Judge William Allen of General Sessions on Monday and that the December grand jury, which has been hearing the evidence, would then be dismissed.

Reports $30,000 Jewelry Robbery at Miami Beach

Miami Beach, Fla., Feb. 7.—(AP)—Mrs. Louis Rosenthal of Detroit, reported to Miami Beach police today thieves broke into the bedroom of her winter home and took jewelry valued at between $30,000 and $35,000. She said her loss included three large diamond bracelets, a pearl bracelet with diamond clasp, a diamond brooch, two diamond rings and other articles.

RUPTURE

Don't submit to avoidable operations or the use of antiquated trusses, as they all set where the lump is and not where the opening is. The opening is seldom larger than a dime no matter the size of the rupture, and all cases can be retained with the end of a lead pencil. The Spermatic Shield-Complex in combination with the Retainer-Simplex. (Patent No. 747247, No. 1237709 and other patents pending)—a scientific achievement in a highly specialized art. It will not only retain any case of rupture perfectly, but contracts the opening in 10 days on the average case. Infinitely superior to any instrument method of operations and producing results in no other way obtainable. All cases are secure a lifetime as against further trouble or expense. Large or difficult cases or incisional rupture (following operations) especially solicited. The instrument received the only award in England and in Spain, producing results without surgery, injection, medical treatment or prescriptions with distinguished personal regions of all nations. See Booklet on "The Fallacy of Surgical Procedure."

MELLON BARS COMPROMISE ON BONUS LOAN CASH

And Radicals Fight New Drought Program.

assertions that the Red Cross can adequately care for all cases where charity is required, have been justified, was implied in a message from Lieut. Col. Campbell B. Hodges, his military aid, who was sent to Arkansas to make a first hand study of the situation in the most severely affected drought section.

"Survey has covered sixteen counties, including hardest hit section of state," said Col. Hodges' message, which was made public by Secretary of War Hurley. "Red Cross and local agencies are now adequately meeting situation. Careful search fails to reveal any presence of suffering from hunger and cold. Hope to complete job by the 8th and return to Washington on the 10th."

Compromise Attacked.

Senators La Follette and Wheeler attacked the compromise agreement on the ground that it failed to provide any relief for the unemployed industrial classes and also because of the omission of any specific reference to loans for food which its Democratic supporters are confident will be made.

It seems probable that most of the radical Republicans, including Senator William E. Borah [Rep., Idaho], would line up against the agreement, and that a number of Democrats, among them Senators A. W. Barkley [Ky.], Carter Glass [Va.], and E. D. Smith [S. C.], also would do so.

Senator La Follette said he could not understand "the callous indifference of the President and members of his cabinet and many members of congress to suffering in the cities."

"There is more at stake in this controversy than has appeared on the surface," said Senator La Follette. "I don't think it is the sum of money involved. Back of it is a determination on the part of the administration to establish a precedent against the appropriation of money from the treasury of the United States to assist millions of people of this country who are suffering for want of food and shelter, through no fault of their own. The time has come for congress to face the real issue."

Cites Omission of Cities.

Senator La Follete said that "if there has been an agreement that food is to be used for suffering farmers and their families, let us have the courage to write that into the law."

Senator Wheeler pointed out that the $25,000,000 relief appropriation, which the house and President Hoover refused to accept, would have applied to the unemployed in the cities, as well as the farmers in the drought area.

"Congress is unwilling to appropriate a dollar for the thousands of unemployed who are walking the streets," said Senator Wheeler. "Why should we discriminate in favor of the farmers and against these workers? I am opposed to the compromise. As a face saving proposition it is not a very creditable performance, either for the President or for congress."

Secretary Hyde's Letter.

Secretary Hyde, in his letter, said there are two phases to the problem of relief in the drought area, one involving relief to those who have no resources and, therefore, no security to offer for loans, and the other involving adequate credit for those who can offer security for loans to enable them to carry on their usual operations.

Secretary Hyde said that the compromise program "avoids doles or direct charity from the federal treasury or any implication thereof."

Representative Wood read the Hyde letter to the house and defended the compromise agreement as Representative La Guardia and others peppered him with questions.

Representative L. C. Cramton [Rep., Mich.], head of the house conferees on the interior department bill, commended the compromise, as did Representative John Q. Tilson [Rep., Conn.], majority leader.

"Red Cross Unimpaired."

Representative Tilson said that the adoption of the compromise "will settle once and for all that hereafter the Red Cross is to be left with its power unimpaired to perform its proper function in the distribution of charities."

Senator Robinson in a speech tonight said that he had no doubt that "fair application of the remedies provided in the proposed compromise agreement, supplemented by the relief afforded by the Red Cross to those who can not obtain loans, will prove satisfactory and highly beneficial." He said that the language providing for loans "for crop production and for further agricultural rehabilitation" is "comprehensive and inclusive."

COMPLETE PLAN FOR WOMEN TO SERVE ON JURIES

COMPLETE PLANS FOR WOMEN TO SERVE ON JURIES

Municipal Court Ready to Receive Them.

Legal impediments to jury service for women having been abolished by the referendum last November, physical barriers were practically all removed yesterday in a conference held in the office of Chief Justice John J. Sonsteby of the Municipal court. Representatives of various women's organizations participated, agreeing in the consensus that the stage was ready for the entrance of the feminine veniremen in the Municipal court.

Minor difficulties in calling women for jury service, Judge Sonsteby commented in calling the meeting to order, concern the compiling of lists of those eligible to serve and accommodations for women in the courtrooms. An inspection of the courtrooms on the eleventh floor of the city hall was made following adjournment and it was decided that no alterations would be required in the jury rooms, since juries in the Municipal court are generally out from ten minutes to an hour only.

Any details remaining to be settled will be handled by a committee of six women present yesterday, under the chairmanship of Miss Esther Dunshee, a woman attorney who for years has been prominent in the efforts to secure women jurors. Her associates, appointed by Judge Sonsteby, include Mrs. Rena Elrod, Miss Genevieve Corkell, Miss Edith Abbott, Mrs. Laura Fischer, and Mrs. P. E. Madden. The committee will meet Wednesday in the chief justice's quarters to confer on progress.

"There really isn't any reason why women jurors shouldn't be serving now," Judge Sonsteby said to the gathering. "I have been told by the election commissioners that there has been some difficulty in getting the names of women to serve, but there shouldn't be. The only thing necessary is to go to the election commissioners and get the names from the polling list, and I am now requesting the jury commissioners to submit the names of women along with those of men."

Mrs. Glenn E. Plumb, county commissioner, who was present, stated that she had heard nothing of such difficulties, and promised to see to it that any obstacles in the way of insufficient help in the election commissioner's office were given attention.

Some discussion arose concerning the matter of employing women bailiffs. It was decided that since the intervals when juries are locked up are comparatively brief, men bailiffs would suffice.

BRITISH WOMAN FLYER PLANS TO HOP OCEAN SOON

New York, Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Mrs. Victor Bruce, who started out on her spectacular career by riding a motorcycle to her convent school and has just finished a round-the-world flight in her tiny Blackburn Bluebird sport plane, sailed for home today on the Ile de France.

Unless her plans go awry, the Englishwomen will be the first woman actually to pilot a plane across the Atlantic ocean. She expects to fly a ten passenger amphibian yacht from London to Buenos Aires to join the prince of Wales' British trade expedition within the next fortnight.

Lest any one think this stunt is outside the abilities of this dimunitive air sportswoman who started on her round-the-world flight after only forty hours in the air—and still has fewer than 200—it may be said that she has driven a racing automobile for a stretch of twenty-four hours at an average of ninety miles on haur. Furthermore, with her racing driver husband, she held the world's record of driving a motor car for ten days without a stop.

SHAFFER RETIRES AS PUBLISHER OF CHICAGO POST

Newspaper Will Continue Publication.

The final edition of the Chicago Evening Post last evening carried a statement signed by John C. Shaffer announcing his retirement as publisher of the newspaper, which he had owned for the last 50 years. The statement, however, did not indicate what disposition would be made of the property.

Yesterday afternoon a judgment amounting to $491 was obtained against the Post company by the Arthur Dixon Transfer company in Superior Judge Walter B. Steffen's court. It was understood that this was the action of a friendly creditor to permit a re-organization of the company through which the property could be operated to the best interests of the creditors.

Publisher of Indiana Papers.

In his statement, Mr. Shaffer said that "none of my other business interests is involved in the affairs of the Chicago Evening Post." Mr. Shaffer is publisher of the Indianapolis Star, the Muncie Star, and the Terre Haute Star, all Indiana morning newspapers. He succeeded the late Herman H. Kohlsaat in 1901 as owner of the Post.

The Post was one of a group of newspapers which at one time included the three Indiana papers, the Louisville Herald, the Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Colo., and the Denver Times. The Chicago Evening Post was founded on April 29, 1890, by the late James W. Scott.

Statement on Retirement.

Mr. Shaffer's statement on his retirement as publisher read as follows:

"After 30 years of service to city, state, and nation, under my ownership and editorial direction, the Chicago Evening Post, with today's final edition, passes out of my control. I have given to it my time and money without financial reward. I have believed that the old saying, 'a good name is rather to be chosen than riches,' has special application to a daily newspaper, and I have been concerned chiefly that it should be true of the Post.

"My compensation has been sufficient and satisfactory to me in the fellowship, the friendship, the loyalty, and coöperation of the members of my staff and the other local employés of the Chicago Evening Post.

"It has been my policy to maintain my newspaper as a free organ of opinion and independent of party or factional obligations; hence, although tendered important political positions, by both President Roosevelt and President Taft, I never accepted political office.

"Burden Too Great," He Says.

"The financial burden of carrying the Post as a public service enterprise has become greater than my responsibilities justify me in bearing. It is with the greatest regret that I have reached the decision to discontinue my connection with it, but I do so with the feeling that it has its career won and held the confidence and respect of its readers and served loyally its community.

"This action on my part will in no way interfere with the continued publication of the Chicago Evening Post. None of my other business interests is involved in the affairs of the Chicago Evening Post."

Care for Two Abandoned Children

A five year old girl and her four year old brother, who were found early yesterday wandering along Harrison street by the South State street police, were taken to the Juvenile Detention home last night. Too young and frightened to speak distinctly, they gave their names as "Mary Madgalene Beecher" and "Orville Beecher." They gave their home address doubtfully as 1690 West Congress street, but police found no clews there.

The two children said their father had left them at a bus station saying that they should wait there and "a nice lady would come and get them."

TWO HOTEL CLERKS ROBBED.

Ray Donaldson, clerk at the Devon Arms hotel, 6330 Winthrop avenue, was held up by a gunman yesterday morning and robbed of $73. LINCOLN CLAIMED AS A NATIVE OF EXTINCT VILLAGE

After 122 years, the date when Abraham Lincoln was born, seems hardly open to debate, but just where he was born is another matter. For more than a century the conviction has persisted that he first saw the light of day at Hodgenville, Ky. Just as the world prepares once more to observe the birth date of the Emancipator on Thursday, comes the assertion that the extinct town of Burlington, near Hodgenville, could more accurately be credited with that distinction.

Dr. Louis A. Warren, historian of the Lincoln Historical Research foundation of Fort Wayne, Ind., says that Burlington grew up around a certain John Close's mill, and included a "large distillery, a blacksmith shop, and a storeroom in the settlement." Hodgenville, which sprang into being simultaneously around Hodgen's mill, was a few miles away. Burlington later faded out of existence.

"In the course of a conversation," Dr. Warren states, "Lincoln once said, 'I was born at Cave Spring, about two and a half miles south of Hodgenville,' and he might have added, 'near where the town of Burlington once stood'." According to Dr. Warren's contention, the cabin where Lincoln was born should not be considered as lying within Hodgenville, but rather as within the extinct Burlington.

In Chicago one of the most comprehensive programs of the anniversary will be held at the Chicago Woman's club. Mrs. Henry Hoyt Hilton, the president, will give the foreword. Edward Price Bell will be the principal speaker. H. F. Simon, German consul general; the Rev. Samuel Knox Wilson of Loyola university; William J. Bogan, superintendent of schools, and Alexander B. Jackson, representing the Negro race, will make brief talks.

COUNTY BOOSTS INCOME ESTIMATE TO FIT BUDGET

Appropriation Excess Cut $800,000 Thereby.

The finance committee of the county board gained headway yesterday in its efforts to produce a balanced corporate budget for 1931. Finding it difficult to reduce appropriations, the committee adopted the expedient of boosting the estimated revenues, thereby cutting $800,000 from the excess of appropriations over revenues.

When the board adjourned at 10 p. m. the total of proposed appropriations stood at $25,789,000, and revenue at $25,139,000, leaving a difference of $650,000 which must be eliminated to make both ends meet. After Friday's session the revenues were $1,450,000 under the appropriations.

The remedy was simple. In the original budget the receipts from delinquent tax fees for 1927 had been estimated at $200,000; for 1928 at $400,000, and for 1929 at $500,000. In addition there is in the county treasury some $100,000 in undistributed delinquent tax fees, making a total of $1,500,000.

Add $800,000 to Estimate.

The committee was informed by its financial experts that this estimate of $1,500,000 is too conservative, and that all of the tax fees might be credited to the corporate fund instead of being distributed among the several funds. Therefore $800,000 was added to the estimated revenues and the over-appropriation was automatically reduced by that amount.

The appropriations for the county's taxing machinery again precipitated a lively dispute. The country town assessors, who had been allotted $81,000, asked for an additional $8,000. J. L. Jacobs, county efficiency engineer, pointed out that the country assessors are among the targets in house bill 28, pending in the legislature, which would abolish the present assessing system, and protested against the increase.

Commissioner George A. Miller of Oak Park, who is also a country assessor, insisted on the increase and suggested that the committee might cut the appropriation for Jacobs and then dispense with his services at the end of the year. To which Jacobs replied that he would be pleased. The increase was approved by a vote of 7 to 3.

Refuse Burglar Alarm System.

The request of County Treasurer McDonough for $1,032 to install a burglar alarm system in the treasurer's department, to safegaurd the public funds, which sometimes run into millions of dollars, was refused, but the committee allotted him $5,000 toward a new elevator.

Then there was the question of appropriating money for four revolving doors for the Clark street entrance of the county building, to match the new doors in the city hall. This was voted down after Miss Amelia Sears, one of the commissioners, declared that if there could be no salary increases there certainly should be no new doors.

The committee restored $25,000 of the $33,000 which had been cut several days ago from the appropriation for County Clerk Robert M. Sweitzer. It was pointed out that the clerk's department was the only one that had been given an appropriation below that of 1930 and that the additional funds would aid Sweitzer in speeding up work on the 1929 taxes.

"Valley" Liquor Racketeer Victim of Assassins' Bullets

Mrs. Philimena Tanzillo, widow of victim of assassins' guns.

MINOR 'VALLEY' RUM RACKETEER IS FOUND SLAIN

8 Men Quizzed, Fail to Give Clew.

Joseph Tanzillo, 34 years old, known as a small-fry bootlegger in the "valley district" who kept a beer flat and hustled a little alcohol on the side, was found shot to death early yesterday morning in the alley at the rear of 630 Miller street. He had been shot twice in the head, his hands had been bound behind his back and all his pockets had been turned inside out.

Maxwell street police took eight men into custody for questioning, but yesterday afternoon they were unable to establish a definite motive for the killing. They believed that Tanzillo's ambition to rise in the booze racket got him into trouble that resulted in the murder.

One of those questioned was Dominick Fedel, owner of a fish market at Harrison and Morgan streets and known to the police as a dealer in alcohol. According to the police, Tanzillo had been arrested for annoying Fedel's wife some time ago and the fish peddler made threats against Tanzillo. Capt. Matthew Zimmer, however, was inclined to believe Fedel's story that he had nothing to do with the shooting.

The place where Tanzillo's body was found is only a block from his home at 627 South Aberdeen street. The position of the body, propped up against a fence, and the fact that the hands were tied, indicated that he had been shot elsewhere and taken to a spot which his assailants believed to be the rear of his home. Tanzillo was dressed in expensive clothes. His body was found by two teamsters.

The slain man's relatives said that he had been a laborer but had been out of work lately. He was married and the father of two small children.

ATLANTIC FLYERS SAIL FOR ITALY; 11 PLANES SOLD

RIO DE JANEIRO, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Gen. Italo Balbo and his trans-Atlantic flight companions started for home today by steamer with an escort of Brazilian government planes flying above them as the ship moved out of the harbor. The Italian leader's last official act was a visit to Gen. Getulio Vargas, the president.

The eleven seaplanes, used on the flight from Rome and Portuguese Guinea, have been sold to the government. The price was about $43,500 for each plane, payable in three installments of six months each.

The Brazilian government reserved the right to pay either in coffee or Brazilian currency.

LIST INCOME TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR THE AUTO OWNER

BY HAL FOUST.

Automobile owners are informed in a bulletin issued yesterday by the Chicago Motor club, how to make full allowances for their cars in filing federal income tax returns. The returns on 1930 incomes are due not later than March 15.

There are six expense items that may be deducted from gross income, according to the club, irrespective of whether the car is used for business or for pleasure. They are:

1. All sums paid during the calendar year as registration fees, city vehicle taxes or state personal property tax.
2. The total paid as a gasoline tax where the law has been construed to make the tax a consumer tax, as is the case in Illinois.

Interest Is Deductible.

3. Interest on money borrowed for the purchase of an automobile.
4. Uncompensated losses by reason of damages to one's automobile, unless caused by the wilful act or wilful negligence of the taxpayer seeking the deduction.
5. The amount of finance charges on automobiles purchased. This is allowed to the extent that such charges are for interest and risk on the loan, but that portion of the charges covering the premium on insurance to protect the finance company's interest may not be deducted.
6. Damages for injuries to persons or for destruction of property, unless such injuries or damages are caused by the wilful act or wilful negligence of the taxpayer seeking the deduction.

Two Business Deductions.

Two additional expense items are deductible only where the car is used wholly or partly for business. They are listed by the motor club as follows:

1. All operating and maintenance expenses, including depreciation, on automobiles used wholly for business or a pro rata share of such expenses representing the portion of a car's total use that is devoted to business.
2. Insurance premiums on automobiles used wholly for business or a pro rata of the premiums calculated the same as an operating expense.

On an automobile used solely for business, the loss through a trade-in for a new car is an authorized deduction from gross income. This loss is calculated by subtracting the allowance for the old car from the difference between its original purchase price and depreciation. A pro rata share of this loss is deductible in replacing an old car for a new one used more than fifty per cent for business.

BOARD REMOVES 64 FROM RACE FOR ALDERMEN

Wipes Out All Opposition to Four Candidates.

Protests against the nominating petitions of 64 candidates for aldermen were upheld by the board of election commissioners yesterday and as a result the names will not be printed on the ballots. The action of the board reduced the number of candidates to 265. Of the 432 who started the race, 103 already had voluntarily withdrawn. The decisions wiped out all opposition to four aldermen.

The only protest not decided was the case against William G. Agar, candidate in the 4th ward against Ald. B. A. Crenson. The board said it would rule on the Agar petitions Monday.

Rulings Remove Opposition.

Edgar G. Brown, Negro, the only other candidate in the 4th ward race, was among those ousted by the commission decisions yesterday, but he announced he would seek an injunction to restrain the board from eliminating his name from the ballots.

In both the 2nd and 46th wards, the board ruled out all of the candidates except the sitting aldermen. Both Ald. Louis B. Anderson [2nd] and Ald. Oscar F. Nelson [46th], are Thompson leaders in the city council. Anderson had five opponents and Nelson had four, but the action of the commission leaves both of them without any opposition for reelection.

Five of the six candidates against Ald. Robert R. Jackson, in the 3rd ward campaign, also were ruled out by the election board, and Ald. Frank A. Sloan [26th] and Ald. William H. Feigenbutz [45th], two other Thompson aldermen, were each left with only one opponent by the rulings of the election commissioners.

Five Assured of Reelection.

The two candidates who opposed Ald. Jacob Arvey [24th] and the one candidate against Ald. Sheldon W. Govier [9th] were ousted from the race by the action of the election board, assuring the two aldermen of reelection along with Anderson, Nelson, and Ald. John J. Coughlin [1st], whose two opponents voluntarily withdrew.

All 13 of the protests which Ald. Guy Guernsey [6th] had filed against the field in his race for reelection were overruled. Ald. Guernsey is affiliated with the Deneen organization.

The commissioners sustained the objections to the petitions of Robert E. Barbee, former alderman who had entered the 17th ward race against Ald. James G. Coyle. Two other candidates against Ald. Coyle also were eliminated but he still has three opponents.

BORAH DEFENDS STIMSON STAND ON RECOGNITION

Says It's Traditional U. S. Policy.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, insurgent Republican chairman of the senate foreign relations committee, today applauded an address made last night by Secretary of State Stimson, saying that he hoped it meant a return to the Jeffersonian doctrine concerning this country's relations with foreign powers.

Answers Democrats' Attack.

"It seems to me that Secretary Stimson has restated the traditional American policy and I trust it will be followed," said Senator Borah. "Of course I believe the Wilsonian policy of not recognizing a government unless it had acceded to power by constitutional means would be preferred by the American people, but it happens that it has not proved practical and workable, while the traditional policy declared by Secretary Stimson has proved workable."

Senator Borah's remarks were made in answer to an attack on Mr. Stimson's speech, led by Senator Joseph T. Robinson [Dem., Ark.], minority leader, and carried on by Senators Swanson and Glass, Virginia Democrats, and Key Pittman [Dem., Nev.] The minority senators disliked what they considered an assault on President Wilson contained in Secretary Stimson's reference to Wilson's refusal to recognize the Huerta government in Mexico.

Dislikes Reference to Wilson.

Senator Robinson declared Secretary Stimson's reference to President Wilson was "unfair," and he went on to point out what he claimed were inconsistencies in the secretary's praise of the administration's foreign policy. How, he wanted to know, did Secretary Stimson reconcile his stated policy of recognizing de facto governments with the action of his predecessors, Secretaries Hughes and Kellogg in persuading the Central American states to make a treaty binding them not to recognize any government established by revolution or coup d'etat?

"Again," he went on, "if President Wilson was wrong for refusing to recognize the Huerta régime in Mexico, how does Secretary Stimson expect to save his face in view of his refusal to accord recognition to Russia? The latter is more firmly established than was the Mexican government under Huerta."

LITSINGER "TOO BUSY" TO ACT IN FARO SWINDLE

State's Attorney Swanson said yesterday he had consulted Edward R. Litsinger, member of the board of review, relative to Litsinger's intentions for prosecution in connection with the $50,000 faro swindle at Springfield in which Mrs. Myrtle Tanner Blackidge, then United States collector of internal revenue, was a victim. He did so, Mr. Swanson stated, at the request of State's Attorney Fullenwilder of Sangamon county, who wants to know what action may be expected.

"I am too busy right now with the campaign but I'll let you know in a week," Litsinger said, according to Mr. Swanson. Until the reviewer makes up his mind nothing will be done, Prosecutor Swanson said.

It was understood that Litsinger had abandoned his idea of prosecuting Mrs. Blackidge as a party to the conspiracy in which he lost the $50,000 he had entrusted to her, and that she in turn had decided not to sue Litsinger for slander. Meanwhile, neither has asked the issuance of warrants for the confidence men, the prosecutors stated.

Hoover's First Teacher, Ill, Gets Box of Carnations

West Branch, Ia., Feb. 7.—Mrs. Mollie Brown Carran, first teacher of President Hoover, was made happy yesterday by the receipt of a box of carnations from the White House. Mrs. Carran is paralyzed, and while her condition is not critical it is not believed she can recover because of her age.

ROAD POLICIES IN ILLINOIS.

The Association of County Highway Superintendents of Illinois favors two changes in the present road building practices of the state. The state now constructs roads up to but not within city limits. Almost half the revenue of the state highway department derived from licenses and the gasoline tax is received from Chicago motorists, many of whom seldom, if ever, drive their cars outside Chicago. No roads in the state are as heavily used as the arterial highways in Chicago. So far as Chicago is concerned, the plan of the county highway association would mean the use of part of the gasoline tax in the construction of high speed two level roads.

Though the means differ, the end to be achieved is similar to that intended by the Illinois Municipal league, which favors the division of the gasoline tax into three equal parts, one to go to the state for the completion of the bond issue roads, one to the counties as at present, and one to the cities. The cities, in turn, would be required to give priority in the expenditure of the money to state routes and, secondarily, to streets auxiliary to the main thoroughfares.

The state highway department has denied the charge that it has more funds at its disposal than it can spend advantageously, a charge made both by the municipal league on behalf of the cities and by some of the motor clubs. The facts should not be difficult to obtain. Certainly it is unfair to the city motorist to employ none of the money he pays for road building in the construction of the roads he uses most, especially if the state government has more funds for highway purposes than it needs.

The other proposal of the association has to do with the purchase of rights of way for state highways. Here the facts are clearer and the conclusions more certain. Under present practice the state will not construct or widen a road or build a grade separation until the right of way has been obtained by the county concerned. That rule was justified when most of the construction was in rural counties. The farmer could generally afford to give the county the required strip for the advantages he received in return; and, even if it were found necessary to buy the right of way, the cost was measured in acreage and not in town lot values.

The roads were a boon to the farmers past whose lands the roads ran. They are not a boon in the same sense to the owner of subdivision property. Mr. E. L. Gates, Du Page county's highway superintendent, put it this way:

"A wide pavement means more traffic roaring and pounding past the front door of the suburbanite, day and night. Residence on one of these express highways is no more desirable than living beside a railroad track. . . . It's the motoring public that wants the wider pavements, the improved alignment on curves and the grade separations. . . . It's the motoring public, therefore, that should pay for the required right of way."

This position is unassailable. The legislature and administrative officers will be supported by public opinion in authorizing the use of highway revenues for the purchase of rights of way.

AMERICAN HELP FOR COMMUNISM.

A New York dispatch reports that 150 railway executives are being recruited in the United States to rehabilitate and extend the Russian railroads. Five great American railroads are helping to select the men. "The objective of the American engineers is to put American methods into Russian railroading, to organize and man the roads along American lines, and to expend effectively almost a billion and three-quarters dollars a year appropriated by the soviet to make its railroads measure up to the standard which—also under the direction of American and other imported engineers—its manufacturing industries are attaining."

An American traveler, just back from Russia, commenting upon the optimistic opinions of a prominent American hydro-electric engineer who is in charge of one of the chief soviet projects, said: "No wonder. He is paid an enormous salary—$250,000 a year. His technicians are all Americans. They are specially housed and supplied. The situation induces optimism." The 150 executives will also probably become optimistic while their jobs last and we shall be hearing from them as authorities upon the genial merits of communism and the bright prospect of its ultimate triumph.

Meanwhile they will be helping the present political tyranny to avoid the consequences of its own doctrines and contributing vitally to the perpetuation of a system bent upon destroying throughout the world the civilization which gave them the knowledge and efficiency they are selling to its foe.

This course is within their legal rights as freemen. There is justification alleged on the ground that the Russians have a right to their own form of government and should not be prevented from enjoying it. That this implies substantially to helping it to maintain itself seems to us doubtful, certainly considering that it is a political power aggressively hostile to our own domestic peace. Another excuse is founded in the theory that the necessity of using capitalist workers for the establishment of communist enterprise helps to discredit that system. The soviet statesmen obviously are not afraid of that result. What they want and must have, if their power is to survive, is what the American engineers can give them.

THE SENATE IN THESE DAYS.

Senator Nye's expense account brought the senate to the attention of the house of representatives and gave the house leaders an opportunity to examine some of the curious methods of government prevailing in the upper chamber. The principal case at issue was the interference in state elections by the Nye committee.

"This congress," said Representative Underhill of Massachusetts, chairman of the house committee on accounts, "has absolutely nothing to do with the primaries in Illinois and this committee had no right to make such an investigation at the expense of the taxpayers, not only of my state but of Illinois as well."

The house members were in a jeering mood, but the fun was serious and the situation an oddity. The lower house was rebuking the upper for its wildness, irregularity, and irresponsibility. The senate has ceased to be a check in government. It is constantly stepping outside its authority. With it the constitution is something in which to press wild flowers.

The reason for the senate's irresponsibility can easily be found. It is not a truly representative body. The house is. Therefore the latter, although large, is an orderly, sober, responsible legislative body. As such it endeavors to check senate enthusiasms and wildness. The senate has been used as an illustration of the reasonableness and justice of restricted representation. It is, in truth, becoming a horrible example of the folly and injustice of it. If people and not states were represented in the senate it might have remained what it was supposed to be, a deliberative body in which the rasher impulses of political action would be put on trial for their sanity. Wild scenery would not have so many wild senators.

It was a necessary requirement of the early republic that the senate should be composed as it is. The compromise with the principles of true representative government had to be made if the states were to be brought into the Union. The original states were surrendering certain powers to form a central government. They were giving up a measure of independence for common security. The lesser ones thought they needed protection in the common assembly and they were given equality of representation in the senate to secure them that. It was a price paid for the surrender of some of their rights, for the conferring of some of their powers on the federated government. They were in a position in which no state has been since. They were making a government. Most of the later states were made by the government. They had rights conferred on them and equal representation in the senate was not a natural right. It was a privilege which had to be granted, being confirmed in the constitution. It was an impairment of the principle of representation which could not be avoided in the first instance and therefore in no subsequent one.

In itself it was bad. It prepared the way for just such a composition as the senate now has, and proponents of unequal representation may have it as an illustration of what they want, a body controlled by the people who have least at stake in the decisions made. The situation was made worse by rushing territory into statehood to increase party votes in the senate in the contest for control between the north and the south. One way of offsetting the provision that each state shall have two senators regardless of population would have been to keep certain areas in territorial status.

States which do not expect to suffer from irresponsibility in congressional action prefer radical to conservative representation in the senate. Their voters may feel that it gives them their best opportunity for self-assertion in the Union and that otherwise negligibility would be their prospect. Their senators find that radicalism is the best political policy, offering the best security of tenure with the least opposition at home. The consequences are almost inevitable, with the result that the chamber intended to be the conservative, considerate, and deliberate body now needs the check of the house of representatives.

Editorial of the Day

JANUARY SUMMER EXPLAINED.

[Minneapolis Tribune.]

Minnesota's January summer has been subjected to analysis by Prof. Frederick K. Butters of the department of botany of the University of Minnesota. He believes that warm weather is more due to the lack of snow than the lack of snow is due to warm weather.

Long a careful observer of weather conditions in the northwest, he has come to the conclusion that when the northwest has a snowless winter it may expect a rise in average temperature of as much as 10 degrees.

As Prof. Butters explains it, there are two principal reasons why there are warmer temperatures without snow. The first is that snow is white, and white is a reflecting, not an absorbing, surface. A white covering of snow reflects most of the solar energy that strikes it, while a gray or brown surface, like the earth without snow, absorbs solar energy and transforms it into heat. Little solar energy is transformed into heat when it encounters snow.

The other reason is that a heavy blanket of snow transforms the surface of the earth into the equivalent of an ice box. It is practically impossible for air at the earth's surface to rise above 32 degrees in temperature when there is snow on the ground, while the sun's energy is used up in an effort to melt snow as long as there is any on the ground.

Prof. Butters also points out that the usual winter areas of high atmospheric pressure that overhang northern Canada are noticeably absent this year. These are usually the source of winter cold in Minnesota and the northwest. He is unable to offer an explanation for this change.

Meantime, whatever the causes, January, 1931, passes into history with a temperature record that seems to indicate this winter will go down as one of the most unusual within the memory of the oldest Minnesota settler.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN
And the New Order

(Pictures in Rotogravure Section.)

"FOUR score and seven years ago," said Lincoln at Gettysburg, "our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

It was a new order. Virginia philosophers, such as George Mason and Thomas Jefferson, had stated its doctrines. All men are created equal. (With blacks in slavery perplexing the philosophers.) There was a right to happiness or at least to the pursuit of happiness. Government, derived from the consent of the governed, must conserve the natural rights of man. The slaves furnished the irony for this. They must be regarded as less than men and yet religion could not reject them as less than human. They were within the protection of creeds, but outside the protection of codes. Virginia felt the embarrassment of the moral dilemma more sensitively as it suffered from the economic fallacy of slavery more acutely. Profit can corrupt philosophy. Losses can refine it.

The new order had evolved philosophically in Virginia and realistically in New England. The southern squirearchy had time for abstractions. Sun, soil, and the black man did the work. The New England counting house put events in one dish of the scales and pounds, shillings, and pence in the other. They were required to balance on a profit basis.

The Pilgrims were more nearly meek than most other refugees or adventurers who came to make new homes, new states, a new nation, and a new order. The Puritans were not meek. They were only political failures. They came to escape their inability at home to impose themselves on others. Their clerics were beaten but undismayed.

The New Englanders could reason a morality into a good percentage as easily as the British can attach a point of honor to an oil field. All manner of harried people, however, found their way to the American shore. Not many of the 400,000 Huguenots, escaping from France after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, could come, but some did, solid men of character. The great English revolution, bringing in William and Mary, did not extend its toleration to the Presbyterians of Ireland. A tariff against Irish wool products completed the ruin, and the American southwestern frontier got its dominating strain from the north of Ireland, with Huguenot and German admixtures.

The Virginia philosophers attacked primogeniture, knowing it to be the stronghold of feudal caste. It preserved property for a special class of the first born son. It prevented the distribution of estates and it sent the cadets of the land owning families into the callings supporting aristocracy, the army, the navy, and the church. When these cadets entered London business firms they tied even commerce to the society of caste. The new order could not start with these limitations. Jefferson abolished primogeniture. Otherwise men could not be regarded as free and equal. The prohibition of titles of nobility came in natural sequence.

The old German tribes whose folk law, although superseded at home by the reception of Roman law, had been preserved in the shires of Anglo-Saxon England, could not have held their own on the assumption that competent leadership was hereditary or that a good man was an inferior one because of circumstances and conditions of birth. From their ideas of equality the new order in America took its elected executive and dismissed the crown.

The English themselves decline to experiment with this theory. The Germans are trying it. It is their oldest tradition. They may succeed. Their trial will come when they lose Von Hindenburg, a character as providential as Washington. The French, the nearest akin to the Americans in the doctrine of the average man (saving the Scandinavians who have escaped from external problems), have been in and out of success. Elsewhere there is only failure.

When the English colonists in America undertook to set up a new system of government and a new order of society they did not have much to tear down before they could start building. They were virtually all commoners. If there had been some influential titles among them, many such men as Lord Fairfax, and if these Whig nobles had supported the revolution the political structure might have included a house of lords and a limited monarchy. John Adams said the impossibility of having a hereditary senate made the crown unthinkable. There was nothing of the feudal system to perpetuate in the American order and consequently it became the order of the average man.

Until the election of Andrew Jackson the new order, theorized for the average man, had nevertheless provided a government of the superior people. Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and John Quincy Adams, whatever their conflict in ideas might be, were not commoners. Nor was Jackson, but he was elected by commoners as an assertion of the privilege which subsequently was to elect William Henry Harrison, again not a commoner, but chosen by them, Zachary Taylor, and Abraham Lincoln, and come into the present dogma that no aristocrat can be nominated.

Lincoln's feeling that the average man had proved himself at Gettysburg is apparent in his famous speech. Could the average man have his system put to the severest test and would he win? Could he not only make a government but could he support and maintain it when it was attacked? There were none of the personal sentimentalities or issues of privilege and profit which attach partisans to a side in a war of monarchical integrity or succession.

The question at Gettysburg was stated in the phrase that men are created equal. It could not be fully answered there, but the origins of the principle could be affirmed anew. The average man could prove his faith against caste government and for the dignity of free labor. Actually the great victory for this cause was the coincidental one at Vicksburg, but tradition has overshadowed it at Gettysburg.

With a little more patience on the part of the north, slavery would have settled itself. Every raiser of stock knows he cannot carry pensioners without going broke. This carry was imposed in slavery. The slave was not the legal man, but he was the Christian human. He was not a steer to be knocked in the head and sold as food. He could not be killed when useless. It was hardly practical to work him to death. The Missouri compromise did not so much state a political decision as it recognized a natural condition. North of 36:30 there was no chance at all for slavery, and south of it only a limited duration for it. Douglas was right, but the issue craved violence and inevitably got it, violence being the favored human method of hustling nature.

The Romans could endure white slavery by a system of manumission, impractical in a slave order in which the manumitted man was black. Some proof could be given for the assertion that no hustling of nature ever was worth the price paid for it, but the slow way is not the emotional human way.

At Gettysburg Lincoln celebrated with fuller consciousness than most of his compatriots had of the event the triumph of the new order, the permanence of the social scheme of the average man.

CHILD GUIDANCE.

IN December, 1921, a habit clinic for child guidance was established in Boston. That clinic is still going strong and several similar ones are still in operation in other parts of the country. When the Boston clinic was finding its field the children sent to it came almost exclusively from the homes of the poor. The settlements and social agencies sent to it the problem children in the families served by them. In the course of time the problem has changed.

Now the difficulty is in preventing the rich and the socially established from using the equipment of the clinic to the exclusion of the poor. The so-called better classes have discovered that this clinic offered them help with the personality and behavior problems of their children, help that it was not easy for them to find elsewhere. The clinic has grown until the question now is not where to find material, but how to meet all the demands put upon it.

This is the method of operation: A parent recognizes that her child behaves unlike other children. It may be that he wants to play by himself, has no social instincts or, on the other hand, he is too boisterous, destructive, and combative in his play. Or the difficulty may be one of eating and sleeping, or of honesty and truthfulness. At any rate, there is a behavior problem.

Or, the problem may be one of personality, peculiar behavior being less prominent in the picture. The parent visits the clinic and registers the child, or application is made by writing or telephone. A social worker visits the home and learns everything possible about the family, the peculiarities of its members, their moods, their emotions, whether the parents get along together, how much harmony there is among the brothers and sisters, economic conditions, and other items. Next, the parent carries the child to the clinic.

The child is examined physically and mentally. His personality and behavior are studied. The child and the home are diagnosed. The parents and family are advised as to the training of the child. Next, the social worker visits the home and discusses the advice given with the family, that there may be no misunderstandings. Thereafter, until the child becomes emotionally stable, or so long as is necessary, the parent and child attend the clinic from time to time and the social worker goes to the home periodically.

PROBABLY DUE TO PRESSURE.

Mrs. I. B. writes: What is the cause of hands falling asleep? No matter which way I sleep, when I awake they feel numb and puffed up and it is a few seconds before they feel normal again.

REPLY.

Pressure is the probable cause. Have you any dropsy anywhere?

COD LIVER OIL HARMLESS.

M. C. M. writes: I know of one satisfactory experience with psoriasis. A person who had had it for years said the patches disappeared when she took cod liver oil internally. The treatment may not be a permanent cure.

REPLY.

One case is not enough on which to base an opinion. But no harm will follow taking cod liver oil.

RINGS UNDER THE EYES.

J. C. writes: I am a young unmarried man with no bad habits and apparently in good health, as I am never sick. Yet I always have dark circles under my eyes. I get about eight hours' sleep every night, eat well, and feel good.

REPLY.

Is your room well ventilated? Is your bed comfortable? Are you a sound sleeper?

TEST BLOOD PRESSURE.

A Reader writes: What could cause shooting pains through my head? I am a woman 37 years of age, and have always been in good health. Have just had these pains off and on during the last year. They are not real headaches, but just shooting pains.

REPLY.

Have your blood pressure studied and your retina examined.

INTERPRETATION OF WILL.

Chicago, Jan. 20.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—A woman willed all her property, etc., to certain institutions. 1. Later she married and wants the original will to stay, although she transferred all documents into her new name adopted by act of marriage. 2. Has the husband any right on her property after her death? 3. Have the institutions mentioned in her will any right on the property which she and her husband have in joint tenancy? J. A. R.

1. In general, under Illinois law, such a marriage would revoke a prior will.
2. Yes.
3. No. If the instrument expressly provides for joint tenancy as distinguished from tenancy in common, the surviving joint tenant will take to the exclusion of the heirs or devisees of the one who dies first.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

NO STREET SIGNS.

Chicago, Jan. 27.—[Friend of the People.]—Will you please see what can be done about having a street sign placed on the corner of Roscoe street and Austin avenue? There are no signs between Addison and Roscoe streets. This makes it very inconvenient for people who do not know the neighborhood, and especially those trying to find a location at night. C. S.

Report is made that street signs have been ordered and will be placed at the intersection of Roscoe street and Austin avenue within a short time.

JOSEPH J. BUTLER,
Superintendent of Streets.

HOWLING DOGS.

Chicago, Jan. 20.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—Has a landlord in a residential district the right to keep a number of dogs which constantly disturb the peace? We have notified the police several times with no results. How can I stop this by legal procedure? S. G.

Section 1063 of the city code provides: "If it shall appear that any dog has in any manner disturbed the quiet of any person or persons, or caused any abrasion of the skin, or attempted to bite or snap at any person or persons within the city, the owner or keeper shall be fined not less than five dollars nor more than two hundred dollars." We suggest that you try complaining to police headquarters.

LOOKS AS IF WE GOT THE OLD FORT REBUILT JUST IN TIME

FROM THE TRIBUNE'S COLUMNS

16 YEARS AGO TODAY

FEBRUARY 8, 1915.

ROME.—Pope Benedict prayed for peace and 60,000 worshipers, on their knees in St. Peter's, repeated after him his supplication to the "God of all mercies, king of peace," that the war might be speedily ended. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon all the bells of the 400 churches in the city pealed out, calling the residents to services.

LONDON.—Official statements issued in Berlin and Paris reported gains by both the Germans and the allies. Southeast of Ypres the Germans have taken a French trench and two English machine guns. South of the canal of La Bassee the French penetrated and captured one of the German trenches.

PARIS.—Resumption of Austrian attacks on all Montenegrin positions along the banks of the Drina in the mountains near Dorado are reported in a dispatch to the Havas agency from Cettinje. The Austrian fire was silenced by the Montenegrin artillery.

WASHINGTON. — You may say "good-by" to the 12 cent round steaks, the 20 cent porterhouse, and the 15 cent rib roast. The good old days of cheap beef are never to come again to the United States. No longer will the government seek to find a "goat" to blame for the high price of beef; no trust; no indolence or shortsightedness on the part of American farmers is to be blamed in the future. Economic conditions will rule, is the report of the department of agriculture meat survey.

CHICAGO.—The solicitation of the $500,000 fund to provide jobs for Chicago's unemployed will begin today.

30 YEARS AGO TODAY

FEBRUARY 8, 1901.

CHICAGO.—Capt. James S. Dunham, for nearly half a century a leader in marine affairs in Chicago, died at his home, 29 Bellevue place, at the age of 64. It was his long fight to preserve the Chicago river for navigation that made him best known as a citizen.

CHICAGO.—Five women drug store wreckers sought to raid pharmacies on Milwaukee avenue and damaged three places before they were stopped.

THE HAGUE.—Wilhelmina, queen of the Netherlands, was wedded to Henry, duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, in the severe simplicity of the ceremony prescribed by the Dutch Reformed church. The city was filled with people from all over the country, who cheered the young rulers as they passed through the gayly decorated streets. The civil ceremony in the white hall of the palace was followed by religious rites in the church.

CHICAGO.—The First ward's third annual masquerade ball was given in the First Regiment armory by the First Ward "Regular" Democratic club. At THE TRIBUNE'S request Jacob A. Riis, renowned authority on slums and sociology, attended the affair, sponsored by Ald. Hinky Dink Kenna and "Bathhouse" John Coughlin, and wrote his views of it, which were that it was "surprisingly frank," to say the least.

50 YEARS AGO TODAY

FEBRUARY 8, 1881.

MILWAUKEE, Wis. — A fire at Omro, Wis., destroyed one-half of the business part of the town, including ten stores, a planing mill, Thompson & Hayden's carriage works, and a large business block. The loss is $200,000.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—The large pork house of J. C. Ferguson & Co. was destroyed by fire at a loss of nearly $600,000.

LONDON.—The steamer Bohemian, which left Boston Jan. 27 for Liverpool, was wrecked on the Irish coast and 32 persons were drowned. Twenty-one of the crew, including the second officer, were saved. One member of the crew succeeded in getting on a rock off the coast, and all efforts to get him off had failed at last accounts.

LONDON.—Twelve men are imprisoned and it is supposed have perished by an explosion in Whitfield colliery, near Chell, Staffordshire. The pit took fire and is still burning.

DUBLIN.—Mr. Walsh, one of the Irish Land leaguers recently tried, has been induced by his friends to leave Ireland. He will proceed to Australia immediately, his ostensible purpose being to organize a land league there. Other members of the league are going to America.

THE EASY LIFE OF A COLLEGIAN.

Chicago, Jan. 29.—I was very much interested in a statement published in today's TRIBUNE, made by the son or the governor of New York, Elliot Roosevelt. He denounced college as being useless, but a fine vacation if one could afford the time.

I have certainly come to that conclusion, after having my son in a local university for the last two years. Since our son was a baby his father and I have planned to send him to college. By depriving ourselves of a number of things we were able to do so. He is taking the maximum number of semester hours but his average time in school is four hours a day; sometimes it is only one and a half hours. Living within a mile of the school thus leaves him about twelve hours a day for study, but, as he gets fairly good grades and studies only about two hours a day, he has just about ten hours to loaf.

The fraternities, which I understand are a fine place to kill time, did not appeal to him and it seems the athletics are usurped entirely by fraternity men. School opened about the first of October. Thanksgiving there was a recess of almost a week; Christmas, two weeks; last week and next week are given over to examinations, which in the case of my son means about ten or twelve hours in school in the entire two weeks. Easter there will be another week, with school closing on June 1.

At this time, when so many men with dependents are out of work, it seems a shame to send him out to look for spare time work, but I am certainly fed up on this everlasting vacation and would like the opinion of other parents who are sending their children to college at some sacrifice and feel they are getting so little for it.

Why could not the college course be three years and eight solid hours of classwork a day? DISSATISFIED.

THE TERRIBLE MEEK.

Grinnell, Ia., Feb. 1.—Some distinguished author might have written a book on the situation in India and not have told the story so well as Mr. McCutcheon's cartoon. The ghastly joke of it is that the lion, typical of self-centered brute force, represents a great Christian nation; the nearly naked heathen before him is the exponent of the lofty ethics of the Redeemer. And the lion finds that he is helpless. What a wonderful thing it would be if the spirit of the cartoon would permeate the editorial department of THE TRIBUNE, our schools, our colleges, the church, and the nation. C. A. M.

THE BONUS.

Chicago, Jan. 27.—Too bad about Mr. Andrew Mellon opposing the legislation to provide for payment of the soldiers' bonus. No doubt he has plenty to eat and wants for nothing, but what about the poor vet, who may be on the verge of starvation in this terrible time of depression? I wonder how many of the soldiers who fought for their country will be on this old earth of ours in 1945, still waiting to be reimbursed for the fighting and suffering they endured twenty-seven years before. They are just as much entitled to be reimbursed as the fellow who stayed behind in 1918 and derived any benefits that were going. Let's give these ex-soldiers of ours a big hand and join them in their fight for the bonus. MRS. JULIA HERRON.

THE NEED FOR ACTION.

Chicago, Jan. 30.—I enjoy the cartoons by Orr, which are always very well drawn to depict his subject. Today's cartoon entitled "A Picture Hard to Explain" is certainly a humdinger and one to think about. Today's paper also says, "All eyes are on Chicago, due to the daily gang war and holdups." To the outside world Chicago must be the object of ridicule, serious as is the ludicrous and amazing situation. It almost seems a myth or a fairy tale that citizens of Chicago will permit such a situation to exist. Taxpayers paying their good money for protection and in return having their places of business entered in broad daylight by bandits who steal thousands and walk away unmolested. Department stores, theaters, and churches are invaded, and still these thugs emerge and disappear most mysteriously. It would seem almost necessary for the citizens of Chicago to demand protection by the state militia, or from a home guard.

Surely it is time for action and it is to be hoped that THE TRIBUNE will continue its campaign via Orr's cartoons to arouse the citizens of Chicago to action. J. A. R.

RENT AND TAXES.

Chicago, Jan. 30.—In order that the attention of the voters may be forcibly drawn to the class of men they are electing to spend their money, I suggest that henceforth landlords provide for the payment of rent, in drawing their leases, for example, as follows:

"The rent shall be $30.00 for use and occupancy and $25.00 for taxes."

BILLS IN THE LEGISLATURE.

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 19.—We note with great interest that on Jan. 15 and 16 you published a list of the bills introduced in both houses of the general assembly. As we consider this a very valuable service, may we express our appreciation of this information you supply to your readers in such a simple and effective way? We hope that you may be able to continue this publication.

CLARE H. TREADWAY,

THE WAGES OF POLITICS.

Chicago, Jan. 26.—I'd like to suggest that state and city officials from the governor and mayor down accept a cut of from 10 to 15 per cent of their wartime salaries. With the large surplus of candidates for the various political jobs it should be easy to get good men now. Who'll start the ball rolling? Come forward, candidates, declare yourself for lower salaries and you can rest assured of success in the coming elections. E. C. M.

VEHICLE TAGS STOLEN.

Chicago, Jan. 27.—I have believed in that old theory of getting my vehicle tax early, but apparently one would fare far better if he were to wait until such time as the gentlemen who make a practice of stealing licenses are fully supplied. E. F. MACKLE.

IN SUM.

Chicago, Jan. 24.—The Wickersham commission used up 9,000 perfectly good words in its report, whereas the thing might have been so much better accomplished in three, as follows: Yes and no. L. J. K.

JUDGE SABATH CHOSEN TO HEAR BROTHERS TRIAL

McGoorty Sets the Case for March 3.

Judge Joseph Sabath was assigned yesterday to preside at the trial of Leo V. Brothers, who was indicted for the murder of Alfred J. Lingle. Chief Justice John P. McGoorty of the Criminal court acted when the Brothers case was returned to him for reassignment following the request by Brothers' lawyers for a change of venue from the court of Judge John Prystalski.

"We have conferred with the assistant state's attorneys and we have agreed upon either Judge Sabath or Judge Joseph Burke," said Attorney Henry Christy, who asserted that he was acting for Attorneys Louis Piquett and Tyrrell Krum, counsel for Brothers. "The state prefers Judge Sabath because Judge Burke is new on the Circuit bench, but either is satisfactory to us."

Sets Case for March 3.

"In view of the fact that Judge Sabath is the senior judge I will assign the trial to him," Chief Justice McGoorty announced. "I must inform you, however, that you will not be permitted to secure any delay because of the change of venue petition and I am putting the case on Judge Sabath's call for trial on March 3.

"We had not intended to gain delay through this procedure," Attorney Christy said. "Barring unforeseen developments, the defense will be ready for trial."

Prosecutors Satisfied.

Assistant State's Attorneys James E. Sullivan and O. Wayland Brooks informed the court they were satisfied. It was agreed that if any preliminary motions are to be filed they will be presented to Judge Sabath.

Judge Sabath is a veteran of the bench and during his 15 years as a superior court judge he has presided in the Criminal court during several famous trials. WIFE DIVORCES OWNER OF OIL STATION CHAIN

Circuit Judge Trude yesterday granted a divorce to Mrs. Ruth Anderson, 21 years old, of 7526 South Peoria street, from Arthur Anderson, 7453 South Stewart avenue. The couple separated in June, 1928, and shortly afterwards Mrs. Anderson filed a suit demanding a half interest in a chain of filling stations, valued at $250,000.

She lost her fight for the property rights in the lower courts, but was upheld in the Supreme court. A few weeks later Anderson found his wife and Robert Simpson, a traveling salesman of St. Louis, together in a loop hotel. There followed an eight hour siege, during which Anderson and two private detectives pounded at the door.

The siege ended when Mrs. Anderson's attorney, Benjamin Ehrlich, appeared. Simpson and Mrs. Anderson were charged with disorderly conduct, but the charge was dismissed. Mrs. Anderson then sued for divorce on grounds of desertion.

TOBIN REPLACES CAPT. PALCZYNSKI IN POLICE POST

Capt. Michael Tobin took command of the West Chicago avenue police district yesterday, replacing Capt. Joseph Palczynski, suspended because of alleged laxity in the prosecution of three men arrested for rape but tried in court for disorderly conduct. The suspension was the result of recommendations of the special grand jury impaneled to investigate charges of police graft.

Assistant State's Attorney Charles J. Mueller said that at present there is no evidence for the jury to consider, but tomorrow a number of officials of reform organizations will have an opportunity to present any information regarding police corruption they may have.

On the list of witnesses are the Rev. Philip Yarrow of the Illinois Vigilance association; Elmer J. Davis, head of the Better Government association, and the Rev. Elmer L. Williams, editor of Lightnin'. Col. Robert Isham Randolph, chairman of the Chicago Association of Commerce, and Gordon L. Hostetter, executive secretary of the Employers' association, will also be witnesses.

E. J. Kelly, Park Board Head, Undergoes Operation

Edward J. Kelly, president of the south park board and chief engineer for the sanitary district, was recovering last night from an operation for appendicitis performed yesterday morning by Dr. Michael McGuire at the Mercy hospital.

U. S. TO TAKE OVER CIVIL WAR GRAVES ON PRISON ISLAND

Sandusky, O., Feb. 7.—(AP)—The last of the forlorn graves on Johnson's island, whose rocky, picturesque shores walled a prison for thousands of confederate soldiers, has come into the possession of the government the captives fought.

President Hoover the other day signed a bill authorizing the war department to acquire without cost the little 100x485 foot plot formerly owned by the Robert Patton chapter of Cincinnati, United Daughters of the Confederacy. The rest of the plots, containing in all the graves of 206 soldiers of the south who died while prisoners of war, were taken over in 1906.

The little islet was a prison for a total of 13,000 gray clad men between 1862 and 1864, although the most at any one time was 3,000. There they watched 247 of their comrades die, mostly from wounds, the union reports said.

TROOPS DEFEAT 2 REBEL BANDS IN NICARAGUA

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Headquarters of the Nicarguan National Guard reported today patrols of guardsmen clashed with two bands of insurgents yesterday.

At San Antonio, near the Honduran frontier, a frontier patrol of eighteen men under Capt. Williams was surrounded by about sixty well armed insurgents who suddenly opened fire from three sides.

The attacking party was well armed with machine guns, rifles and grenades, and battled the guardsmen for half an hour. The insurgents were finally dispersed and the pursuing guard party had another contact with them a little later.

On the same day a patrol of guardsmen commanded by Lieut. Clark surprised a well armed insurgent camp near Condega and routed the party. Pedro Blondon, a lieutenant of Gen. Augustino Sandino, was understood to have been in command of the band.

PLAN TO EXPLORE NEW ISLANDS ON ZEP POLAR HOP

LEIPZIG, Germany, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Plans for a flight to the north pole by the dirigible Graf Zeppelin next summer have been virtually completed, Ludwig Weickmann, director of the Leipzig Geophysical institute, announced today. The question of finances is the only snag in the way of a 1931 trip, he said.

The principal work of the expedition, Herr Weickmann said, would be the exploration of newly discovered islands between Franz Josef land and Emperor Nicholas land. A soviet expedition has already erected a wireless station on one of the islands, which will be used as a base.

Scientists hope the experts aboard the dirigible will be able to determine exactly the contours of Emperor Nicholas land and the islands by photographic survey. The Graf Zeppelin will head into the arctic wastes from Leningrad. If possible, German and Swedish scientists will be landed to explore the new islands on foot. The airship now is in its winter quarters at Friedrichshafen, after a profitable year during which it made 104 flights, carried 4,063 passengers and nearly 1,000,000 pieces of mail.

FILE INVENTORY OF ESTATE OF R. FLOYD CLINCH

An inventory of the estate of R. Floyd Clinch, Chicago business leader and philanthropist, who died on Nov. 9, was filed yesterday with Nuncio Bonelli, assistant to Probate Judge Henry Horner. Attorneys for the estate said that with the settlement of stocks held as security and claims against the estate, the estate will be worth about $1,000,000. The largest single stock holding is 695 shares of Central Trust company preferred stock valued at $178,750. Under his will, Mr. Clinch left his entire estate in trust to his widow, Mrs. Katherine Lay Clinch of Hubbard Woods, and two children, Duncan Lamont Clinch and Margaret Lay Clinch.

Hursen Funerals in Every Neighborhood

HURSEN Funerals are being conducted constantly in every nook and corner of Chicago. They are seen constantly, also, in all the suburbs—north, south and west. This has been so for a quarter of a century. The demand is constantly increasing.

A situation such as this is unusual in this country. Hursen's has always been unusual. Years ago Hursen revolutionized the methods of funeral technique. Service, environment, manner, personnel, automobile equipment, and above all, price, were all revolutionized.

Hursen Chapels are today recognized as the finest instutions of the kind in this country. The North Side Chapel particularly is a masterpiece of beauty, massiveness, facilities and arrangement. It has recently been remodeled. The South Side and West Side Chapels are palaces, convenient for the smallest or the largest funerals.

All Hursen automobile equipment, the finest things on wheels, was built for Hursen along Hursen special designs. Yet, the charge is no greater than for equipment far less desirable.

There is no charge for the use of any of the three Hursen Chapels, each equipped with organs of unmatchable tone and size. The charges for Hursen funerals are less than the charges usually made elsewhere. So, call Hursen, of course!

BEGIN THREE WAY INVESTIGATION OF MOVIE BLAST

Hint Explosion Caused by Bomb; 31 Injured.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Three official inquiries, one by Los Angeles police, one by fire department and one by private operatives, were launched today into the explosion which threatened lives of scores last night, and sent 31 to hospitals at the opening of the motion picture "Cimarron."

One theory was that the explosion, which ripped a deep cavity in the street at Broadway near Ninth, sent a 150 pound cast iron manhole flying into the air, and wrecked two automobiles, was that a bomb had been set in front of the theater.

Reveal Threat Messages.

William Le Baron, Hiram Brown, Joseph Schnetzler, and other executives of the film corporation which was responsible for the ostentatious first night performance, revealed today that they had received threats.

The threats were in pencil, and were received over a period of several days. They advised that a public parading of gowns, furs, jewels, and evening wear be called off at a time of business depression and suffering.

One of the executives was summoned from a dinner party last evening to answer a phone call, at which an anonymous voice assured him there would be trouble if the pretentious plans for "Cimarron's" first night were persisted in. Brown assured his dinner guests, who included Richard Dix, Estelle Taylor, Roscoe Ates, and others, that they would receive ample protection if anything happened at the opening.

Theater Crowd Periled.

The explosion occurred at 11:30 p. m., just before the theater crowd left the show house, and while a long line of limousines and taxicabs was wheeling slowly toward the theater in the midst of a light drizzle. Had the time been fifteen minutes later, when the theatergoers were massed together, and had not the rain thinned a crowd of thousands which had gathered earlier in the evening hoping for a peek at the movie notables, many fatalities might have occurred among nationally known picture persons.

In addition to the foul play theory two other lines of inquiry were pursued today. One considered that a short circuit inside the manhole, or a spark from the exhaust of a taxicab just above it, might have touched off an accumulation of sewer gas or illuminating gas in the manhole cavity.

Of the 31 hurt in the explosion, Taxi Chauffeur George Delk was the only one in a critical condition tonight. His taxicab was blown ten feet into the air and he suffered a fractured skull and broken leg. Otar Shillett, actor, and Renee Hayes, 18 years old, and Bobbie Tietge, 21, dancers, were the only persons from the Hollywood film colony hurt.

SENATE ACTION PERILS CHICAGO POSTOFFICE PLAN

Limit Funds for Each State to 15 Million.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—A bill which may have the effect of delaying the completion of the Chicago postoffice was passed by the senate today. The measure, which authorizes an additional 100 million dollars to be spent on federal buildings, carries a section providing that the limit on public buildings constructed in any one state be increased from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000.

While this section raises the limitation, it does not meet the desire of the treasury department. The department first asked that the limit be removed entirely, in order to further public building construction in Illinois, New York and Pennsylvania. Congress objecting to this, the treasury department amended its request and asked for a limit of $20,000,000.

May Curtail Construction Work.

The attitude of the department was expressed in a letter from Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Ferry K. Heath, which was read into the record today by Senator David I. Walsh [Dem., Mass.], who, with Senator Royal S. Copeland [Dem., N. Y.], expressed the viewpoint of the more populous states.

"If the present limitation of annual expenditures of $10,000,000 'in any one state' under the present public building legislation is not increased, it is not possible that the payment for sites, the purchase of which is under negotiation in the states of New York, Pennsylvania and Illinois in any one fiscal year may result in curtailing construction work in those states," Mr. Heath's letter asserted.

Limit Funds for States.

"If the limitation is increased to $15,000,000, the situation will be relieved only as to Pennsylvania. On the other hand, if the limit can be increased to $20,000,000, it is believed, met again, no curtailment of the construction program in any state will be necessary."

The compromise amendment proposed by Senator Swanson [Dem., Va.], raising the limitation to $15,000,000, was finally adopted and the bill passed. The bill contained a provision concerning estimates which, it is considered, will allow construction work to be pushed more rapidly. This would allow the treasury department, in case no bid came within the estimate, to accept a bid up to 5 per cent above the estimated cost, thus avoiding the necessity of waiting until congress

Policeman Catches Bandit After Loop Store Robbery

Five minutes after he had held up and robbed the Regal shoe store at 53 West Madison street of $50, Fred R. Bennett, 29 years old, was captured yesterday by Policeman Frank Palonis as he boarded a Milwaukee avenue street car at Madison and Dearborn streets. Twenty passengers on the car were thrown into a panic as the policeman entered with a drawn gun, but Bennett did not struggle although armed.

THE NEW OLDSMOBILE is THE LOWEST PRICED CAR WITH the SYNCRO-MESH TRANSMISSION

Among the many important new features now provided in Oldsmobile is the famous Syncro-Mesh transmission . . . and this is the first time this patented feature has ever been made available at a price so low.

The advantages offered by the Syncro-Mesh transmission make it one of the most desirable of present day fine car features. It permits smooth, rapid shifting through all gears . . . from low into second, from second to high, and from high back to second—in absolute silence.

Gear-clashing is eliminated. And driving in traffic is easier, for the downward shift—from high into second—can be made without reducing car speed. This shift . . . so difficult with the ordinary transmission, and so useful for a quick burst of speed in traffic . . . is also a factor of safety and convenience when driving in mountainous country, where second gear is frequently employed for its braking effect on the car.

Further, the second gear in Oldsmobile's Syncro-Mesh transmission is a new quiet type—assuring smooth, swift acceleration which rivals high-gear performance in quietness.

Until you have actually driven the new Oldsmobile and experienced for yourself the driving ease and flashing acceleration made possible by the Syncro-Mesh transmission, you cannot appreciate how much this modern fine car feature really adds to driving enjoyment.

FINE CAR FEATURES OF THE NEW OLDSMOBILE

THE SYNCRO-MESH TRANSMISSION . . . A NEW QUIET SECOND GEAR . . . NEW DOWN-DRAFT CARBURETION . . . COORDINATED STARTER AND THROTTLE . . . A NEW CARBURETOR-SILENCER . . . NEW INSULATED FISHER BODIES . . . OPTIONAL UPHOLSTERY . . . A DEEPER, STURDIER FRAME . . . FIVE WIRE OR FIVE DEMOUNTABLE WOOD WHEELS . . . MORE DISTINCTIVE APPEARANCE . . . FINER ALL-ROUND PERFORMANCE.

PRODUCT OF GENERAL MOTORS

an Open letter to Buick owners

BUICK MOTOR COMPANY
DIVISION OF GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION
FLINT, MICHIGAN

February 7, 1931

Dear Buick Owner:

Because of its importance, we decided to inform you now that the present line of 1931 Buick Straight Eights will not be replaced by new models this summer.

Buick, as you know, has introduced its new cars on August 1st, year after year. But inasmuch as these new Straight Eight models have met with such spontaneous approval by thousands everywhere, Buick has decided to continue manufacturing the present Eights throughout the summer and coming fall.

This is mighty good news to thousands of Buick owners because they will buy new Buicks now with the knowledge that there will be no model change next summer.

They will find in these new Buicks a degree of performance that is certain to give them a genuine thrill. All have the safe, silent-shift Syncro-Mesh transmission. All have Valve-in-Head Straight Eight engines. And all have the famous Insulated Bodies by Fisher.

So well has the 1931 line been received that, out of every 100 eights sold in Buick's price class, 56 are Buicks.

May we suggest that you drive the Eight as Buick Builds It? Your Buick dealer will be very glad to have you take the wheel and learn at first hand how very much Buick Straight Eight performance adds to the joy of motoring.

Very truly yours,

BUICK MOTOR COMPANY

VOTE BY HOUSE ON DRY REPEAL DUE THIS WEEK

Both Sides Concentrate on Senate.

BY ARTHUR EVANS.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Repeal of the Illinois prohibition law and the search and seizure act is the headliner this coming week in the house. Liberals figure the O'Grady repealer, bill No. 1, will be passed Tuesday with more than 95 affirmative votes—77 is a majority.

After that the battle against prohibition will center in the senate, which does not resume activities until Feb. 17, many of the leaders now being in Florida. The O'Grady bill has thrice been passed by the house and thrice been stopped in the senate. Both wets and drys are claiming they will have 26 votes, a constitutional majority, when the bill is put on passage in the upper branch.

Program for House.

The week's program in the house embraces three prime items:

1. The O'Grady repealer to be put on passage on special order Tuesday morning.

2. Revenue reform for Chicago and Cook county to get an open hearing Tuesday in house revenue committee on the Schnackenberg bills to wipe out the present taxing machinery of Cook county and to establish a modern system on simplified lines with centralized responsibility.

3. The Barr senate resolution to appoint a commission to study the 20 year old question of reapportionment set for hearing Wednesday in house judiciary committee, when fireworks are looked for.

With the O'Grady repealer apparently all set for passage in the house by the largest margain it has ever attained, the great topic in the senate is the 26th vote. It takes 26 votes to pass a bill. The liberals count 26 senators as for reapeal and two more in sight. The drys are concentrating on two or three whom they deem may be weak sisters and most susceptible to pressure of various sorts. The drys claim they can bag a couple, although their districts voted for repeal.

21 Districts for Repeal.

In November, out of the 32 downstate districts, 21 voted for r epeal. Only eleven voted against and these eleven, with a total population of 1,014,792, contain less than 15 per cent of the population of Illinois. This popular mandate was reinforced by the Democratic landslide, which piled up a plurality of 744,000 for James Hamilton Lewis, Democrat, for senator in a rockribbed Republican state. The 19 Cook county districts voted for repeal by better than 3 to 1.

The Schnackenberg bills on Cook county revenue reform aim to abolish the board of assessors, the board of review, and the township assessors in the country towns. They involve the elimination of 38 positions. The 30 town assessors are preparing to fight for their jobs. Members of the two big boards likewise find no pleasure in prospects of being eliminated.

The bankers have served notice that they will not buy anticipation warrants for 1931 taxes unless the taxing machinery is reformed. Cook county taxes for 1929 become delinquent April 1, but the delays have been such that the bills are not out yet.

Owes State 17 Millions.

Gov. Emmerson has pointed out that Cook county owes the state some $17,000,000 in taxes long overdue. Advocates of a new system for Cook are banking on substantial support from downstate, for the tax muddle in Cook county is cramping state government as well as the local governments in Chicago and Cook county.

The Barr senate resolution on reapportionment is expected to precipitate a storm. It provides for a commission of nine—three appointed from the house, three from the senate and three by the governor—to make a study of reapportionment. It recommends $10,000 to defray costs. Advocates of reapportionment argue that the question having been debated twenty years with enough words to fill the encyclopedia ought to be pretty well understood by this time. The commission, they argue, would be an "Emmersonian body," and Gov. Emmerson in his message suggested limited representation for Cook county in the assembly—Cook county with 52 per cent of the state population now has only 19 of the 51 districts.

Cafe Aids Drive for Relief Fund

Appeal in Churches

Special appeals will be made in churches this morning for the $5,000,000 relief campaign of the governor's commission on unemployment and relief. The drive ends Wednesday.

Last night collections stood at $4,434,008, leaving a deficit of $565,992. The Illinois Bell Telephone company gave a provisional donation of $15,000 dependent upon pledging of the entire quota. This donation brings provisional plus donations to $93,500. The telephone company had previously donated $50,000, this amount being matched by the employés.

The women's division reported $10,903 in collections after two days of solicitation among club women. The division has a quota of $50,000 and all women's club members have been asked to donate a dollar or more. Mrs. Mary Wall, president of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs is acting as treasurer of the special fund.

Other subscriptions reported yesterday included: Youngstown Sheet and Steel company, $10,000; Jewell Paint and Varnish company, and employés, $400; Madeline Foreman, $2,000; employés of the McClintic-Marshall Construction company, $922; Kraft-Phoenix Cheese corporation (additional), $1,000; American Paper Goods company employés, $300, and Chicago Woman's club members, $207.

Several Oak Park women yesterday took over the opening of a restaurant at 103 South Oak Park avenue, Oak Park. Half of the receipts for the remaining days of the drive will go to the fund. Hostesses yesterday were: Mrs. Louis Yager, west suburban chairman of the relief committee, Mrs. Lionel Hakes, Mrs. Charles Stiger Jr., chairman of the young matrons' committee, Mrs. Lindsay Woodcock, and Mrs. Clarence Marquardt.

15 HURT AS BUS SKIDS OFF ROAD, STRIKING TREE

Hillsdale, Mich., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Fifteen persons were injured, three of them seriously, at noon today when a bus operated by the Premier Coach Lines, Inc., of Detroit, skidded into a ditch and struck a tree. The accident occurred near Jonesville.

The three most seriously hurt were the driver, Don M. Tucker, Chicago; W. H. Defoe, porter, Chicago, and a passenger whose name is not known. They were unconscious when brought to the hospital here.

Others who were injured and who were treated by physicians at Jonesville for cuts and bruises included Harold Montgomery, Chicago; William Steinman of Chicago, Ralph Rappeal, Angus McDonald, and Dale Fontain of Chicago.

GREAT LAKES TO GET $125,000 FOR IMPROVEMENTS

Washington, D. C., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Plans for the expenditure of $125,000 for improvements at the Great Lakes Naval station before July 1 were announced by Secretary of the Navy Adams today. Funds for this work will be provided out of the $4,420,000 carried as emergency building operations in the first deficiency bill, approved yesterday.

Improvements at Great Lakes include work on detention units buildings and the extension of the seaplane hangar for the naval reserve.

WIDOW SEEKING JOB TO SUPPORT SEVEN CHILDREN

Makes Plea for Work to Sally.

Mrs. R. E., on Newgard avenue, a widow with seven children to support, wrote a letter which was received yesterday by Sally Joy Brown of THE TRIBUNE'S bureau for the unemployed. Mrs. E. reveals that she is a practical nurse, but can do hotel or restaurant work, "or anything that will help me to support my children."

"I hate to bother you, as I know you have many other calls for help," Mrs. E. writes, "but I would appreciate ever so much any kind of work. I can give good references."

Last Shoes Worn Out.

A ladies' wearing apparel shop where Mrs. R. of Artesian avenue was employed for two years went out of business, so without a job she writes:

"I have worn out my last pair of shoes looking for work. I am living with my sister, who is also a widow with two small children. Please could you help me find some kind person in the tearoom or restaurant business who would give me a chance to learn how to wait on tables, or cafeteria work? I am honest, clean and very neat in appearance, 27 years old and can furnish the best of references."

Those extracts are a sample of the many appealing letters yesterday in Sally's mail. On the other hand, an effort to find work for the hundreds out of work who appear daily at the Illinois Free Employment service, 116 North Dearborn street, which coöperates with Sally Joy Brown, was apparent in the offers of jobs yesterday.

Permanent Jobs Offered.

Among the permanent jobs offered was that of a window washer for an apartment hotel. The offer was made by Mr. C. on Surf street. Mrs. G. F. on East 43d street called for a man to wash dishes in a restaurant. This, too, is a permanent job.

W. M. on Herndon street wanted a man to paint washing machines. Mrs. J. F. on Paxton called for a cleaning woman whom she would pay 50 cents an hour. The S. club on West Randolph street called for a chambermaid; the A. M. I. company on North La Salle street, a typist; Mrs. S. T. on Margate terrace, a laundress, and Mrs. M. F. on North Bernard street, a woman to do some cleaning.

Your job offer may mean food in a needy household and coal in the kitchen stove. If you have a job offer please call Sally Joy Brown at Superior 0100. She will turn it over to the Illinois Free Employment service.

Volstead Out of Danger After Serious Operation

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 7.—(AP)—Andrew J. Volstead, northwest prohibition department counsel, was said by his physician today to be "out of danger" after an operation Thursday night for appendicitis.

Anne Patterson Farrington Wed to W. C. Cathcart

New York, Feb. 7.—Mrs. Anne Patterson Farrington, daughter of Mrs. Eugene Lester Patterson of Santa Barbara, Cal., was married today in the chapel of St. Thomas' church to Noble Aydelotte Cathcart, son of Dr. and Mrs. William Richard Cathcart of Leonia, N. J. The Rev. Roelof H. Brooks, rector, performed the ceremony. Elizabeth Dana Patterson was her sister's maid of honor. The bride graduated from the University of California in 1923. Mr. Cathcart is publisher of the Saturday Review of Literature.

ALL CLASSES KEEP UP AID TO GOOD FELLOWS

Letterheads from large business concerns and pencilled bits of scratch paper from folk of meager means accompanied new gifts and pledges yesterday to the THE TRIBUNE Good Fellow fund.

Without this financial aid coming from every part of the city it is probable that the 304 needy families, with approximately 1,500 members, now under the care of Good Fellows, would be on starvation rations, many without heat in their homes or sufficient clothing to meet the winter.

The Good Fellow fund, now totaling $20,540.06, has been raised since October. As quickly as new funds arrive beyond the amount necessary for the budgets of Good Fellow families, additional families are adopted.

All families receiving Good Fellow aid are first investigated as to their worthiness by the United Charities, the Central Charities bureau [Catholic], the Salvation Army, and the Jewish Social Service bureau.

GANDHI AGREES TO MEET BRITISH ON PEACE PLAN

Accepts Dominion Idea as Basis for Parley.

BY JOHN STEELE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Feb. 7.—Mahatma Gandhi has definitely agreed to coöperate with the British government in working out a constitution for India, based on the framework constructed at the India round table conference in London. This information was received by the British government today, but the details are still to come and it is not known just what sort of a formula will have to be adopted in order to save the mahatma's face, enabling him to accept the results of the round table conference without loss of prestige.

One of the first signs of the new spirit in dealing with Indian affairs was shown in the case of the maharajah of Bundi, ruler of the important Rajpur state in central India. The maharajah has been misbehaving recently and is said to be a puppet in the hands of his valet, whose mistress is practically ruling the state. A political agent tried to reform the ruler but failed. In the ordinary course it would seem to be up to the viceroy to remove him. Now, however, the government has decided to refer the matter to the chamber of princes and be guided by their advice.

Plan to Indianize Army.

Meanwhile, British army authorities continue to discuss plans for Indianizing the staff of officers in the Indian army. The scheme which seemingly found support among delegates to the round table conference, including even the British section, is based on the Rawlinson plan of 1922, which was pigeon holed by the authorities.

If this scheme is followed in its general lines by the committee which will soon be appointed, the Indianization of the army would be accomplished within a period of 25 to 30 years. In that time the air force, artillery, tank corps and mobile sections would be completely manned by Indians and the British troops would have begun to evacuate.

Position of Officers.

The present position of the Indian section of the Indian army in regard to strength of British officers is as follows: field marshals, 2; generals, 3; lieutenant generals, 4; major generals, 20; colonels, 94; brevet colonels, 4; lieutenant colonels, 284; majors, 445; captains, 1,833; lieutenants, 356 and second lieutenants, 74.

There is an annual turnover of about 120 officers which has to be filled in. There are at present about 106 Indians in officers' ranks, 77 having got through Sandhurst, the British West Point, and the rest directly from the viceroy's commissioned officers.

The Indianization scheme proposes to increase the recruiting of Indians every year. The plan contemplates three stages leading to an all-Indian staff of officers; the first stage from the first to the fourteenth year; the second from the fifteenth to the twenty-third year, and the third from the twenty-fourth to the thirtieth year.

"Willing to Be Converted."

ALLAHABAD, India, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Great Britain will have to offer India something better than Ramsay MacDonald's declarations at the round table conference, Mahatma Gandhi said today, for there is little possibility of settling her problems on the basis of that declaration alone.

"I am willing to be converted," the prophet of Poona said, "but the delegates returning from the conference at London will have to bring with them something more than I can see in the prime minister's declaration. The British authorities will have to show by their actions that they really want peace."

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, one of the delegates to the London conference, came here from Bombay this afternoon and had a long talk with the mahatma. Sapru had hoped to melt the little man's resistance, but Gandhi appeared more determined than ever and it was understood that he had received a disappointing letter from the viceroy in answer to his plea for investigation of police activities against congress party volunteers.

Smiles at Death Sentence.

LAHORE, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Smilingly, Sajah Singh, a former Sikh soldier, accepted sentence of death today for the murder of an English woman and then in a speech from the shadow of the scaffold warned Britian of the fading of the hour of her glory in India. He admitted the murder of Mrs. Curtis, wife of Capt. Curtis, on Jan. 13, and the wounding of her two children, and said had he been acquitted he "would repeat the murders of Englishmen."

He said he had brooded on the grievances of his community and realized that the day of the great fight for freedom in 1857—the date of the Sepoy mutiny—had begun again. He warned that preparations for a great revolution already were in progress and that only a match was needed to kindle the conflagration.

FootTroubles
Cause Bad Health

They affect the body in many different ways. The feet swell, burn, ache, sharp pains under heels, ball of foot becomes sore, and feels as if you are walking on marbles; corns, calluses, ingrown nails and bunions; excessive perspiration with offensive odor, overdeveloped ankles and legs, varicose veins, legs cramp, knees stiffen; pains in hips, small of back, shoulders and neck, poor circulation, with a weak and nervous feeling. Most people think they have rheumatism, neuritis, arthritis, or kidney trouble, when their troubles are all caused from their feet.

Do not be discouraged, regardless of what your condition may be or what you have tried, or whom you have consulted. Do not be satisfied with your own judgment or the advice of those who may not know. Dr. Pinkston guarantees to relieve all foot troubles and cure nine-tenths of them regardless of the nature or condition of the ailment.

URGES BRITAIN TO ASK U. S. TO DEFER WAR DEBT

"Put Pride in Pocket," Tory Advises.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—[U. P.]—Britain should "put her pride in her pocket" and ask the United States for a ten year moratorium on war debts, Lieut. Col. Thomas C. R. Moore, a conservative, said today in discussing the present economic depression throughout the world.

He said it is his intention to urge, in a speech at the house of commons, that this step should be taken by Britain at the earliest possible moment.

Britain Paying in Gold.

"The United States has millions of unemployed," Col. Moore said, "partly due to over-production which, in turn, is largely due to the fact she cannot sell her goods to Europe. Great Britain, too, has an appalling number of unemployed. The fact that she has difficulty in selling her goods to the United States is one of the causes.

"What it amounts to is this: Britain and Europe are being compelled to pay the debts to the United States in gold because the United States' high tariffs are preventing them from paying in goods. The effect is twofold.

"European gold reserves are dwindling, thereby diminishing Europe's purchasing power, slowing down production and increasing unemployment.

"United States gold reserves are swelling, yet, paradoxically enough, unemployment is rising because Europe cannot buy her goods.

U. S. Lost as Customer.

"The price of European manufactured goods is raised considerably by the addition of a heavy duty upon entrance into the United States. This prevents Europe from paying her debt in goods because the American man-in-the-street cannot afford to purchase them. It means that Europe has lost one of her best customers.

"On the other hand, because the European man in the street cannot buy American goods, the United States is suffering from over-production, the surplus of her goods which Europe can no longer absorb. This means unemployment in the United States and it means that the United States, too, has lost one of her best customers—Europe."

Liberals Take Up Cry.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—(AP)—The cry of a moratorium for reparations and the war debts has been taken up by a group of Liberals, three of whom are members of parliament, Viscount Elmley, Edgar Granville, and Frank Owen. In a satement the signatories said:

"Nothing but an emergency plan operated by a scientific government and backed by national push can save the standard of life of our people. Payment of reparations and the American debt causes a distortion of international trade and credit and we must declare a moratorium over a period of our internal development schemes for all debts of this kind whether payable to us or by us. When payments are resumed they must take the form of merchandise."

BOY HELD FOR ROBBING STORE.

Marengo, Ia., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Horace Johnson, 17, who admitted having escaped from the St. Charles, Ill., school for boys, was in jail here today charged with robbing the Brown Jewelry store here Tuesday night. He also confessed two other robberies at Oxford Junction. Part of the Brown loot was recovered.

Bruening Routs Reichstag Foes; Establishes Power

BERLIN, Feb. 7.—[U. P.]—The government of Chancellor Heinrich Bruening firmly established its power in the German reichstag tonight by repeated victories over the extremist parties.

With ever increasing strength, the cabinet turned back the Fascist and communist attacks on the government budget policy and with majorities of more than 100 votes.

The stock market reacted favorably to the government victories and there was an improvement on German bonds in New York and elsewhere, as well as plans for French participation in floating credits for the reichstag.

The most important feature of the government victory was the fact that the economic party, which previously had openly favored Fascist participation in the cabinet, refused to vote against Bruening for the first time in the present reichstag. Apparently as a result of the chancellor's warning in his budget speech that the reichstag must take over responsibility, there was a marked swing toward stabilization of the cabinet after months of uncertainty.

The reichstag first rejected, by 293 to 221, the Fascist and communist motions of misconfidence in the cabinet. There were 15 abstentions. A Fascist demand for dissolution was defeated, 318 to 207, and a Nationalist motion of misconfidence in Gottfried Treviranus, minister with portfolio, was passed over by a vote of 312 to 206, with seven abstaining.

Loan Plan Succeeds.

PARIS, Feb. 7.—The negotiations looking to the participation of French banks in the new international credit of $32,000,000, soon to be extended to Germany on security of preference shares in the state railways, were successfully concluded in Paris today. With the collaboration of French credit institutions assured, only a few minor details now remain before the papers can be signed.

The significance of French participation is far greater than the amount of money involved. French banks, it is believed, will take about $5,000,000 of the total amount, but the change of heart reflected by this action amounts to what may be described as an entirely new attitude toward the question of financial assistance to Germany.

40,000 U. S. TARS READY TO BEGIN GREAT WAR GAME

137 Ships and 273 Planes to Take Part at Panama.

BY GERALD MARTIN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BALBOA, Panama Canal, Feb. 7.—Preparations for the greatest naval maneuvers in United States history, which will open on Feb. 15, began this morning when Admiral John V. Chase, aboard the flagship Texas, passed through the canal to Balboa to conclude plans for a tactical problem in which not only the Panama canal but the projected Nicaraguan canal are to be protected against the powerful Pacific fleet.

Vice Admiral Arthur L. Willard, commanding the scouting fleet, will defend the canal, while Rear Admiral Frank H. Schofield, commanding the battle fleet, will attack. Admiral Willard's scouting fleet will be without the service of battleship division 5, but includes the aircraft carriers Saratoga and Lexington, the dirigible Los Angeles, the submarine V-4, and the Fifteenth naval district's force of submarines and airplanes.

Fleets Evenly Divided.

Admiral Schofield's battle fleet will attack minus the aircraft carriers Lexington and Saratoga and the submarine V-4, but has the light cruiser division and battleship division 5. Naval authorities consider that the chances of the two fleets are evenly divided, taking into consideration defense and attack tactics.

The scouting fleet's first vanguard arrived at Cristobal this morning. The ships came through the canal to Balboa, where they were greeted by 30 naval planes.

Charles Francis Adams, secretary of the navy; David S. Ingalls, assistant secretary of the navy [aeronautical]; and Admiral William V. Pratt, chief of naval operations, will closely watch the problem with Fleet Commander in Chief Chase aboard the Texas. In the maneuvers 137 ships, 273 plans, the dirigible Los Angeles, and 40,000 naval officers and men will take part. The Canal Zone military forces will assist in the defense.

Dirigible Is Moored.

U. S. S. LOS ANGELES, Feb. 7.—(AP)—The naval dirigible Los Angeles was moored to her mastship, the U. S. S. Patoka, at 8:45 o'clock this morning after she had maneuvered over the Canal Zone all night on arrival from Guantanamo, Cuba.

The dirigible left her home hangar at Lakehurst, N. J., Wednesday to participate in the annual United States naval war maneuvers beginning in the Panama region Feb. 15.

Those who made the trip enjoyed stepping down to the Patoka for trips to the ship's canteen and to use the laundry. All meals today were taken aboard the mastship. The Los Angeles was supplied with water, food, and fuel, that she may continue her cruises about Panama beginning tomorrow morning.

The Patoka is equipped with 3,800 containers of helium gas for the big dirigible, with ample oil, gasoline, and food, and also an extra airship motor. She will act as a base for the Los Angeles throughout the war maneuvers.

THE SIGN OF THE ZODIAC

LET DORIS BLAKE, The Tribune's Personal Advice Editor, TELL WHAT THE STARS REVEAL ABOUT YOU. IT'S FREE!

HERE ARE THE FIRST WINNERS

1st Prize $500.00

E. S., 6540 Meadow Lane, Hammond, Ind.

Born March 13th . . .

Ambition: "To have a bright, cheerful home; to have my husband's devotion always and to be a real mother."

E. S., Hammond, Ind.

Born under the sign of Pisces, you are mentally alert and eager to acquire knowledge. Although domesticity is your natural sphere, you have keen interest and appreciation of things outside it, which gives you a broader outlook than that acquired by most women who are extremely domestic. The stars have given you the ability to become expert in anything you attempt. You are not materialistic; but you concern yourself a bit overmuch about security in the future. You are quite affectionate and generous toward others but inclined to indulge in unmerited self-censure. Leo and Scorpio people are probably most congenial to you. March should be a happy and fortunate month for you this year.

2nd Prize $200.00

E. L. B., 3027 W. Clyborn St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Born October 10th . . .

Ambition: "To be a Justice of the United States Supreme Court."

E. L. B., Milwaukee, Wis.

Your sign, Libra, endows its people with good judgment, fairness, and sane tolerance. You are decisive in thought and action and you have great force. All indications point to success in your chosen profession. In the future you should guard against limiting your interests; religion, the arts, and literature would, if you cultivate them, be a source of much happiness and profit for you. The year to come appears to be a rather difficult one for you; fortitude may be put to a severe test. You should prepare for it with resources to be found within yourself.

3rd Prize $100.00

Lucien Young Dyrenforth, 1804 W. Congress St., Chicago, Ill.

Born May 13th . . .

Ambition: "To make a contribution to the study of the nature and causes of cancer and allied diseases."

Lucien Y. Dyrenforth

Your birth sign, Taurus, is an excellent one, bestowing any number of sterling attributes of character and usually coupling these with a strong, active brain and rather superior intellectual attainments. The stars indicate that you are not talkative, but neither are you morose. If you develop your gifts properly you should be successful; your observation is keen, you are patient, and your first impressions are usually sound. It is interesting to note, considering your expressed ambition, that scientific research is strongly favored for you. This year you should avoid financial obligations that appear the least bit uncertain.

TRIBUNE DEPICTS MODERN STYLES IN ARCHITECTURE

Last of Series in Today's Roto Section.

[Pictures in Rotogravure Section.]

Today THE TRIBUNE prints in its rotogravure section the last of a series of pictures depicting four phases of the architectural progress of Chicago. The first set showed the trend up to the time of the fire in 1871, the second the World's Fair period, the third the Tribune Tower competition, while today's set shows present day styles. The pictures were prepared under the supervision of the American Institute of Architects.

"If any TRIBUNE reader will compare the skyscrapers pictured in this week's rotogravure section with those which were illustrated some weeks ago," said Thomas E. Tallmadge, a member of the institute, "he will get an inkling at least of the profound changes that are occurring at the present time in architecture. These changes are world-wide—so universal that this modern style, which has not yet been named, could well be called the "international style."

Sskyscraper Chicago's Own.

"The skyscraper built on a skeleton steel frame, invented and developed in Chicago about 1885, is America's great contribution to architecture and the science of building. Lacking any better method, for some forty-five years these giant steel frames, essentially American and modern, were clothed for the most part with the architecture of ancient Rome, an architecture developed almost two thousand years ago for buildings entirely different from our own in purpose and construction.

"These earlier skyscrapers, many of them landmarks and noble monuments of Chicago's spectacular growth, are easy to recognize. Their ornament, as has been said, dates back to the Cæsars, and their great boxlike forms are crowned with huge classic cornices projecting out over the sidewalks at tremendous heights. Very often they seem to be built of solid masonry, as were their Roman prototypes, though we know very well that what appear to be thick and solid walls are only thinly veneered screens carried by the invisible but all-powerful skeleton of steel within.

The Tribune Competition.

"One of the most typical and beautiful of these skyscrapers is the First National Bank building, while the Peoples Gas building is another. If they err in the proper conception of architectural fitness, they are none the less noble monuments of the greatest period of architectural engineering that the world has known.

"In 1922 THE TRIBUNE'S competition for its tower brought the best thought of the world to the solution of this vexing problem of the skyscraper, and as a result of this symposium the principles of 'modernism' (the international style) were first applied to the design of the skyscraper. Chicago was no less concerned in the development of these new and revolutionizing principles than she was in the invention of the skyscraper, for one of her owns sons, Louis Sullivan, 'way back in 1893, first enunciated them.

"The cataclysm of the world war ended one great cultural epoch and apparently has inaugurated a new, the birth of which we are now seeing and feeling. And the forms of the past are no longer a language which can tell our modern story.

No Useless Ornament.

"Naturally enough, the skyscraper, the most modern and efficient of buildings, has found its voice in the language of this new style, for the aim of the new architecture has been defined as 'the creation of the perfect and therefore beautiful efficiency.' In these buildings, therefore, you will note first the elimination of all useless ornamental excrescences—the cornices, the arches, the columns, the garlands, etc., are all shorn away. The building no longer appears to be solid masonry; very often the glass is brought flush to the surface. So-called classic proportions, which we once thought the foundation stone of beauty, have disappeared, and, strangely enough, we no longer miss them.

"Pressing toward the goal of efficiency, the architect has discovered unguessed beauties in stark engineering and in the utilization of new materials, such as new metals and structural glass. He is constantly calling on science for aid in the abolition of old wastes and nuisances, and every advance such as the modern development of lighting brings in its train, inevitably, as the modernist will say, a new æsthetic."

POPE TO GO ON AIR AT 10 A. M. NEXT THURSDAY

New York, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Details of the radiocast which will carry the words of Pope Pius to the entire Christian world next Thursday at the inauguration of the Vatican radio station were announced today by the Columbia broadcasting system.

Starting at about 10 a. m., eastern standard time, the pope will speak in Latin for several minutes, preceded by Senator Guglielmo Marconi, builder of the station, and Father Gianfranceschi. If a draft of his speech can be obtained it will be translated for English speaking listeners. All three speeches will occupy about 30 minutes.

The pontiff is expected to tap out in Morse code the initials H V J, the name of the station, having recently learned to do so. He may conclude the ceremonies by pronouncing in Latin the first papel benediction ever to go on the air.

2,000 Birds Found Dead in Streets of Mandan, N. D.

Mandan, N. D., Feb. 7.—(AP)—Between 2,000 and 3,000 birds, identified as chestnut colored Lapland longspurs, were found dead in the streets here today. Longspurs usually winter in the south and migrate north in the early spring.

A taxidermist said the birds, akin to the sparrow, apparently were attracted by the city's lights and, blinded by snow, collided with wires or other obstructions.

Wins Court Battle

MRS. MARY J. O'KEEFE.

Mrs. Mary J. O'Keefe, 90 years old, of Joliet yesterday won her legal battle with her son, Walter H. Krouskup, a Chicago broker, for the right to administer a $62,000 estate. Krouskup, who had previously been named conservator of the estate, was removed by Probate Judge Henry Horner on grounds that the Cook county court lacked jurisdiction.

Mrs. O'Keefe has survived two husbands. Krouskup is her son by her first husband, who died in 1868. In May, 1930, Mrs. O'Keefe testified, she came to Chicago at her son's invitation. Suffering from a slight cold, she said her son called his physician and she was taken to the North Shore health resort in Winnetka, where she was kept for two months. Upon leaving the sanitarium, she said, she discovered that Krouskup had been appointed conservator of the estate.

Killing of 'Banker' Is Laid to Holdup Men

Police investigating the killing on Friday night of Thomas P. Constance, known as the "banker" of the Chicago Greek colony, yesterday obtained descriptions of two youths seen running from the alley where the body was found near Halsted street and Belden avenue. Among those who saw them was Sergt. Anthony McDonough of the detective bureau, who lives near there. The theory now is that Constance, who had no enemies so far as can be learned, was killed when he resisted holdup men. The police found $77 in his wallet, and they believe the robbers shot him and fled without searching him.

ROB FACTORY SUPERINTENDENT.

G. M. Fullerton, 1822 South Kenilworth avenue, Berwyn, superintendent at the Western Electric company plant, at Hawthorne, was robbed of his car, $150 in cash and a $300 wrist watch early yesterday when four Negroes stopped him in the 5400 block in Roosevelt road.

NEW CLUB AIMS TO KEEP BOYS OUT OF GANGS

$100,000 Recreation Place Opens Today.

A new boys' club in the heart of the Maxwell-Halsted street district will be opened formally today. Its aim is the reduction of juveuile delinquency in an overpopulated, underprivileged neighborhood.

The new club is a branch of the Chicago Boys' club at 1300 Newberry avenue, and it will be called Old Town Boys' club. L. L. Valentine, president of the Chicago Boys' club, said yesterday that the recreational and educational advantages of the $100,000 center should tend to lower delinquency in a section of the city where 30 to 50 per cent of the boys at one time or another are brought before the police.

Plan to Aid 6,900 Boys.

"The new building will endeavor to serve the 6,900 boys between the ages of 10 and 20 years of age living in the territory," Mr. Valentine said. "Of these lads, 1,214 came to the attention of the police or juveline authorities during a recent year for deliquencies. Between the ages of 10 and 15, one out of every seven required corrective attention, while one out of three above the age of 15 was in trouble.

"The survey shows that if one year's record of arrests continued for five years about 50 per cent of the boys now 16 years of age will be registered on the police blotter by the time they reach their 21st birthday.

"We believe that this new four story building, whose cost was underwritten by several generous Chicagoans, will serve these misguided lads and will turn their abilities to good citizenship instead of mischief. The lack of any recreational or leadership facilities in the neighborhood is largely responsible for delinquency."

Dues 2 to 5 Cents a Week.

The club has a large gymnasium, parlors, game rooms, class and club rooms, painting and music rooms, facilities for manual training and arts. It will have an orchestra and a band and an indoor golf course. Dues range from 2 to 5 cents a week for each boy and may be "worked out" if the boy cannot pay. W. Ryland Boorman is director of the club. John H. Witter is superintendent of the four clubs, the first of which was founded 30 years ago.

BOY SCOUTS MARK 21ST ANNIVERSARY THROUGHOUT U. S.

Celebrate Their Gains This Week.

The Boy Scouts of America come of age today.

Celebration of the 21st birthday of an organization that includes in its membership the President of the United States and the youngster from back-o'-the-yards will be nation-wide today. More than 1,200,000 Scouts and scouters will be joined in the observance by the business leaders along every main street in the land during the anniversary week which closes next Saturday.

Twenty-one years ago President Taft was named the first honorary president of the Boy Scouts and ex-President Theodore Roosevelt was made honorary vice president and chief Scout citizen. Today President Hoover is honorary president, and Calvin Coolidge, honorary vice president.

Points to Huge Growth.

James F. West, chief Scout executive, in reviewing yesterday the activities of scouting since its founding in this country, pointed to the lengthy roster of Scouts and scouters [leaders] —growing from 61,495 at the end of the first year to 5,243,319 at the close of 1930.

"Almost without exception," said Mr. West, "those who have been leaders in America in the last 21 years have contributed in some way to the success of the Boy Scout movement. Scouting has become a vital part of America.

The year 1930 stands out as one of accomplishment, the 21 year review shows. Accomplishments include the launching of the $10,000,000 forward movement and development program and the new Cub, or younger boy organization, which now has 5,000 members.

Membership Shows Gain.

"Other outstanding events in scouting last year was our participation in the Oregon Trail memorial centennial, the return of Paul A. Siple, the scout who accompanied Admiral Byrd to the Antarctic, and our growth in membership," Mr. West reported.

"Notwithstanding the general business depression, new records were made in program activities and in membership. A record number of 23,273 were taught to swim at Boy Scout camps. An increase of five per cent in campers was reported, so that nearly 400,000 boys were in camps during the year. The number of Sea Scouts doubled. Over 163 colleges conducted scouting courses."

In Chicago today 18,000 uniformed Boy Scouts and their 5,000 leaders will open the anniversary week by attending church, where special sermons on scouting will be heard. One of the larger church observances will be this morning at 10:30 at Temple Sholom, 3480 Sheridan road, where E. Urner Goodman, Chicago Scout executive, will speak. Twenty-one troops from the north shore district will attend.

HOLDUP MAN DIES OF FALL.

Robert Schultze, 33 years old, 1951 Emerson street, who fell and fractured his skull on the sidewalk early last week after he had held up a grocery at 1501 Larrabee street, died yesterday at the Garfield Park hospital.

RUSSIAN EXILES TELL OF HORRORS IN LABOR CAMPS

Britain May Ask U. S. for Parley on Subject.

[Copyright: 1931: by the New York Times.]

LONDON, Feb. 7.—A grim series of ten documents, telling of horrors in the northern Russian timber camps, was issued today by Commander Carlton Bellairs, conservative member of parliament, in the form of sworn statements from escaped prisoners. Commander Bellairs was recently invited by Prime Minister MacDonald to supply the British government with evidence of "slavery" in the soviet timber forests.

The new disclosures paint an even more lurid picture than the recent charges of a former Ogpu official at Helsingfors or last week's statement issued at Washington by an American investigator. They tell of overcrowding in the prison camps, of daily deaths from freezing and of 19,000 deaths from typhus during 1930 on a single prison camp island.

Proposes Parley with U. S.

Commander Bellairs was so aroused by the new evidence that he has introduced a motion for an early debate in the house of commons. Like the corresponding motion in the house of lords last week, it cites the recent resolution of the house of representatives committee in Washington, demanding an embargo on soviet timber, and calls for a conference on the subject with the United States.

The most striking of Commander Bellairs' documents is an affidavit from Nicholas Malyshov, a peasant of Kostroma province and a former student of the military academy of medicine at Petrograd. Malyshov was arrested for anti-soviet propaganda while serving in the Red army and was sentenced to three years of penal servitude. He spent a year working in the forests in Solovki camp until he escaped July last year.

Describes Living Conditions.

"Political exiles live in barracks hastily put up by the prisoners themselves," says Malyshov's statement. "The floors are simply made of earth and the soil remains more or less frozen all the year 'round—it is just one block of ice. Neither are there any roofs; ceilings which take their place invariably leak, letting the water from melting snow drip through them. There is no heating; this is supplied by the breath of prisoners.

"Prisoners sleep on couches of bare planks or under them. Overcrowding is something terrible. The number of barracks has become quite insufficient.

"Cases of freezing are of daily occurrence at the forest works. This is due mainly to the fact that hardly any of the prisoners are possessed of warm clothing.

"In the wintertime every prisoner has to saw down thirty-five trees at soil level and rid them of branches after sawing off the top of the tree. Those who haven't completed the task by evening get a thorough thrashing from chekists. The bolshevists don't abstain from applying hard labor even to children."

ARGENTINA FLOODED WITH RUSSIAN GOODS, SOLD AT ANY PRICE

[Copyright: 1931: By the New York Times.]

BUENOS AIRES, Feb. 7.—Russia is dumping all kinds of raw materials and manufactured goods on the Argentine market in quantities which are threatening disaster to Argentine industries.

Cargoes of soviet products have recently arrived at Argentine ports to be disposed of without regard to any fixed price, and they are being sold cheaper than the cheapest competing article on the market.

Local manufacturers have formally petitioned the government to prohibit the importation of all soviet products.

Buying a RADIO is like buying a WATCH

A $1 WATCH will tell you the time, more or less. To own a watch that will tell you accurate time you willingly pay perhaps, $100.

An ordinary radio will give you broadcasting, more or less. To own a Stromberg-Carlson which gives you accurate radio reception with the entire useful musical range, you will pay only a few dollars more in down payment and the equivalent of a month or two more in time payments.

But your pride in a Stromberg-Carlson is even greater than your pride in a magnificent watch. Its tone is heard by all your friends. Its beauty is admired by all who view your home.

A Stromberg-Carlson stands alone in quality. Small size has not been permitted to compromise its tone. Large scale production, with its inevitable sacrifice of quality, to meet a price, has not been permitted to cheapen its materials nor reduce the size of its beautiful cabinet or the strength of its sturdy chassis. Stromberg-Carlson's 36 year background of leadership in telephony remains inviolate.

"There is nothing finer than a Stromberg-Carlson"

Stromberg-Carlson unsurpassed quality Receivers range in price from $155 to $369. The Multi-Record Radio (automatic radio-phonograph combination, electrical), $645. (Prices, less tubes.) They may be purchased with moderate down payment out of income.

Listen to the Stromberg-Carlson Hour Monday Evenings in a Coast-to-Coast Broadcast of the Rochester Civic Orchestra over the N. B. C. Blue Network and Associated Stations.

BARBER MISSING AFTER HE FILES RACKET CHARGES

Wife Tells Prosecutors He Was Threatened.

Investigation of alleged racketeering among officials of the Humboldt Park Master Barbers' association by the racket bureau of the state's attorney's office under Assistant State's Attorneys Charles Mueller and Charles E. Lounsbury was spurred yesterday by the disappearance of Joseph Silbar, a member of the association, whose life was said to have been threatened when he demanded an audit of the books.

Silbar disappeared from his home at 1450 North Washtenaw avenue Thursday night after two men had appeared at the door and told him he had five minutes to leave town. His wife told the police that Silbar hurriedly packed a bag and left.

Books of the organization were seized after Silbar and Frank Kopfer, another member, had complained to Assistant State's Attorney Theodore Miller that officers were misusing funds. Both men were thrown out of a meeting when they demanded an audit and later their shops were wrecked, according to the prosecutors. Kopfer is being guarded by a police detail.

Says Books Show Misuse.

The books of the organization show a diversion of funds, according to Miller. A large amount of the funds collected are not accounted for and collections do not tally with bank statements, he declared.

Among alleged defalcations shown by the books were sums paid to men who never collected them, the prosecutor declared. Entries of bank deposits which had never been made, and salaries that had never been approved by members, were disclosed, it is charged.

All books of the plumbers' union seized two weeks ago by the racket bureau were returned to the union yesterday. The books were seized to investigate alleged racketeering among officials. Contents of five safety deposit boxes of the union, three held in the name of officials, which were opened Friday by Assistant State's Attorney Donald Thompson, yesterday were being investigated. Indication of possible diversion of funds was found, Mr. Thompson stated. He declined to discuss the evidence.

Hears of Bomb Threat.

Prosecutor Thompson announced last night that special police precautions are being taken to protect a special meeting of the protesting members of the union this afternoon at 5247 West Madison street. He said threats had been made that the meeting would be bombed, but assured the union members that the threat would be met with adequate police protection and that picked squads will tour the neighborhood in addition to the police who will attend the meeting. The prosecutor said he did not believe the threat would intimidate the union members.

The regular monthly meeting of the union will be held Tuesday night in the headquarters at 1340 West Washington street. John Coefield of Washington, D. C., president of the international union, will preside. The state's attorney's office is taking steps to protect this meeting also.

The presence of Mr. Coefield is said to indicate a trial of present officers by the international union. Attachés of the state's attorney's office have expressed confidence in Mr. Coefield and assert proof of alleged misuse of funds will be presented to him. Two conferences have been held between State's Attorney Swanson and Mr. Coefield.

RICH RACKETEER OF DETROIT IS SHOT TO DEATH

Widow and 3 Others Held by Police.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Chester La Mare, most powerful and wealthiest racketeer in Detroit and actual lord of the underworld for years, was shot to death today in his home apparently by some one he trusted.

His wife, Anna, 37, and two men and a woman said to be her friends are held. Detectives believe Mrs. La Mare is withholding information against the slayer. As officers entered the home of the slain racketeer Mrs. La Mare said: "Well, you can tell the world Chet La Mare is dead."

A third man, found unconscious in the street, is a police prisoner in Receiving hospital.

Handbag Near Body.

Near the body, detectives found a woman's handbag containing .38 caliber bullets of the same type as the two which killed the gang leader.

Hunted by police and underworld enemies for months, La Mare was assassinated in the kitchen of his home, 15505 Grandville avenue, surrounded by weapons he had gathered to protect his life. He was slain while a police squad laid plans for a raid on his home.

Associates of La Mare predicted immediate reprisals.

Bank books showing recent deposits of $3,500 daily over a period of months were found in the La Mare house. Three years ago, assuming a cloak of respectability, he became a fruit concessionaire in plants of the Ford Motor company with a reported income of $100,000 a year.

The murder was reported by Mrs. La Mare at an early hour today. She said she returned to the house after an absence of three hours and found her husband dead on the kitchen floor, two bullets through his head.

Police said there were many discrepancies in her story.

Apparently Not Armed.

If Mrs. La Mare's story is true, detectives said, it is probable La Mare was shot by one of his own gang. They pointed out he stood in the kitchen with his assassin without taking precautions to arm himself with one of a dozen weapons distributed throughout the house.

In the house police found three .38 caliber pistols, one .25 automatic pistol, one .45 automatic, a rifle, a double barrelled shotgun, a tear gas gun, a tear gas bomb, and thousands of rounds of ammunition. Two powerful police dogs helped guard La Mare.

Son Testifies

A verdict of suicide was returned by a coroner's jury yesterday in the case of William F. Juergens, former president of the pioneer jewelry house of Juergens & Andersen, who shot himself to death Friday in a corridor outside his apartment at the Belden-Stratford hotel. The inquest was held in a mortuary at 1253 North Clark street.

A son, William F. Juergens Jr., told the jury his father had been suffering from a chronic ailment for many years and that recently his mind seemed to wander at times. This testimony was corroborated by Mr. Juergens' physician, Dr. Sylvan Coombs. The doctor said Mr. Juergens frequently lapsed into a "diabetic coma," and that on one occasion when they met Mr. Juergens was unable to recognize him.

Private funeral services are to be held tomorrow. Officers of the Cosmopolitan State bank, of which Mr. Juergens had been a director, said he had resigned his banking connections last October.

Rufus Dawes to Inspect Mayan Exhibit for Fair

Rufus C. Dawes, president of the 1933 World's Fair, will leave Chicago this noon for New Orleans, where he will board a steamer for Yucatan, in Central America, to inspect Mayan ruins from which plans for replicas to be constructed on the fair grounds will be drawn. He will be accompanied by Clarence W. Farrier, assistant director of works for the fair committee. An expedition, headed by Dr. Frans Blom, architect of Tulane university, is excavating and studying ruins at Uxmal in Yucatan.

KING ENDS SEVEN YEAR RULE AS SPANISH 'DESPOT'

Signs Decree Restoring Constitutional Rights.

BY JAY ALLEN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MADRID, Feb. 7.—King Alfonso tonight crossed the Rubicon by fixing his bold signature, in defiance to all threats, to a royal decree calling parliamentary elections for March 1, thus ending his seven and a half year excursion into despotism. The decree will be published tomorrow morning.

By this device, the king sets into motion the long dormant forces to restore old time relations between his royal person and his 22,000,000 subjects and, if formal warnings from his enemies are taken seriously, revolution.

True to his promise made a year ago, Premier Berenguer tonight produced the much delayed decree and announced that beginning tomorrow constitutional privileges and guarantees would be restored.

Pledges Honest Elections.

Up until the very moment when Gen. Berenguer walked out of the council room of the ministry of war, his resignation in the face of the ever growing menace of the legion of abstentionists was rumored throughout Madrid. But he came forth as bland as usual and declared that parliament would meet on March 25, and that, "with a largesse never equaled" the government was offering every conceivable guarantee for honest elections.

But many politicians do not believe this and many more will not participate in the elections because of their wrath against the king. Socialists representing the vast majority of labor; Republicans, who command the support of fully 90 per cent of the students; monarchist enemies of Alfonso XIII, who, under the guidance of Sanchez Guerra, are demanding a constituent assembly, stand fast in their refusal to go to the polls.

They don't intend to sit in dejection with their hands folded while Gen. Berenguer conducts what they consider a travesty on the elections for the benefit of the débris of the monarchical parties, Conservative and Liberal, in order to restore a travesty on constitutional government.

Oppose Election Move.

The king's determination to try at least to hold the elections is being met by an alliance of the Republican and Socialist elements. The Sanchez Guerra adherents will try to make the most out of the 20 day electoral period when, for the first time since 1923, Spaniards will be allowed freedom of speech. They have much to say about this member of the Bourbon family. There also remains the threat of a revolution.

King Alfonso is yielding to no threats. He either thinks his enemies are bluffing or he is planning to fight it out.

But after the failure of the December uprising revolutionary chiefs realize that public opinion needs some prodding. They are prepared to do it when the gag on free speech and press goes off tomorrow. Though in the minority they realize they are not less so than the active supporters of the crown. They will appeal to the silent millions whose centuries of long apathy they believe is past and who, they are fondly certain, have been slowly turning against the king during the years of his dictatorship.

Finds Spain Nervous.

Gen. Berenguer tonight said the government would enforce the order in which free speech could flourish. The constitution, however, provides that the crown cannot be impugned in any way and it is evident that the government intends to enforce this provision, too, as far as it can.

The opening of the electoral period finds the country in a state of extreme nervousness. Alarming posters of revolutionary and counter-revolutionary plots appear everywhere. The Conservative press warns that revolution means bolshevism or worse. La Nacion, the organ of the last dictatorship, cries tonight that rebellions are afoot and can only be countered with a new Primo de Rivera. Business is at a standstill. University students, always happy to riot, are taking a month's enforced vacation on government orders.

WARNING!

A Vicious Deception May Be Attempted Against You

When You Ask for Genuine Bayer Aspirin at a Store, Scrutinize the Box Carefully . . .

The Well-Being of Yourself and Yours is at Stake

We are informed that a rather cruel misrepresentation may be attempted in this district, by unscrupulous or ignorant persons, on those who seek Genuine Bayer Aspirin for pain.

Hence this published warning, printed in the public interest and in ours, to protect your family and yourself from its possible results.

Preparations of unstated origin, we are told—masquerading in packages as nearly alike to Bayer Aspirin packages as possible—are being offered to the public as being "just the same as Bayer Aspirin" or "like Bayer Aspirin," or "giving Bayer Aspirin results."

Watch Out and Take Care. Only genuine Bayer Aspirin can rightfully claim Bayer Aspirin results. Only Bayer Aspirin can fairly claim Bayer Aspirin's SAFETY to the heart. For only the makers of Bayer Aspirin know the laboratory tests it embodies.

Some of these imitations are patently spurious. Some may be vicious in their effects. One that we found in Brooklyn contained 50% of plain Talcum Powder! The maker of this spurious aspirin was sentenced to 3 years' imprisonment by the New York Courts. The well-being of yourself and yours is at stake.

Remember that years ago doctors widely warned the public against "headache remedies" as dangerous to the heart. As heart depressants that were unsafe to take.

Then remember how genuine Bayer Aspirin came. And was acclaimed the world over by leading men of science as SAFE relief for pain, and prescribed without hesitancy by eminent physicians as a relief that did not harm the heart. That did not cause heart depression. That acted with amazing rapidity, yet left no bad "after-effects."

What folly, in light of those things then, to dose yourself with drugs of which you know nothing. Drugs often made primarily to sell at shoddy prices. Made to imitate. Made sometime solely to deceive. Don't gamble—KNOW. The health of yourself and those near to you is too precious for experiment.

Remember those things. Then when you ask for Genuine Bayer Aspirin, see that you get it. Don't be misled for another's profit. Do that, if you must, only with preparations you use externally and not with those you take internally. Only genuine Bayer Aspirin gives Bayer Aspirin results. Every box of Bayer Aspirin has the cross shown below—so has every tablet. Hence it's easy to identify. Watch out and take care. Our interest in this does not matter. But yours does.

DOES NOT HARM THE HEART

LETTS, MARTIN TRAIL IN 1:53.8 HALF MILE RUN

New York, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Russell Chapman, the greatest half miler to appear on the United States horizon since Lloyd Hahn came from the Nebraska plains three years ago, raced two half miles tonight in the Millrose A. A. games in the times of 1:55.2 and 1:53.5.

Chapman ran the second fastest half mile ever recorded in America in defeating Seraphin Martin of France, world's record holder at 800 meters, and Dale Letts of the University of Chicago in the international half mile.

The two great half mile performances came only an hour apart, for Chapman was forced to do almost his best to carry his Bates college mates to victory in a two mile match relay with the University of Pennsylvania, preliminary to the international race.

Sprints on Bell Lap.

The iron legged Chapman, running his second race of the evening, trailed the flying Frenchman until the next to the bell lap and then went out to win as he pleased.

Letts, Big Ten titleholder from the University of Chicago, passed a tired and discouraged foreign invader in the straightaway dash for the tape.

Ray Conger of the Illinois A. C., won the Wanamaker mile, one of the feature events of the games. It was his third straight victory in the event and retired the historic cup from competition.

Conger's Second Best Time.

Conger stepped around the Garden boards in 4:13 3-5, the second best time he ever made. Pounds heavier than he ever was and in excellent condition, Conger might have broken a record if he had been willing to take the lead. He lagged behind in second and third place, letting first Gene Yanzke, who finished third, and then Leo Lermond, Boston strong boy, set the pace. He did not make his bid until the last lap, when his great finishing kick left the others behind as though they were tied.

Lermond, making a comeback campaign, raced a gallant mile to follow

Johnny Emmerick of Springfield, then a flyweight, won his intercity Golden Gloves bout last year. He's expected to come back as a bantam.

They say they're tough from back o' the yards. And Tommy Murray, Golden Gloves welterweight, is no exception.

SOLDIERS' FIELD GETS OLYMPIC TRACK FINALS

New York, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Soldiers' field, Chicago, scene of many an historic sporting combat, today was selected as the site for final trials to choose the 1932 United States team in the Olympic track and field games at Los Angeles.

The Olympic track and field committee, which announced selection of Chicago, also fixed dates at July 15 and 16. Although the size of the team was discussed, no action was taken. General opinion, however, appeared to be in favor of the maximum strength of 81 athletes, three for each event.

Advocating one coach, the committee voted to recommend to the general Olympic committee the appointment of Lawson Robertson of the University of Pennsylvania and head coach of the 1928 team at Amsterdam.

Fred L. Steers, Chicago, was choice of the committee to head the women's track and field committee. Joseph T. England, Baltimore, was named permanent chairman of the committee and C. K. Metcalf, Ames, Ia., secretary.

Members of the committee present at the meeting were Joseph T. England, Baltimore; C. K. Metcalf, Ames, Ia.; A. C. Gilbert, New Haven, Conn.; William J. Bingham, Harvard university; George V. Brown, Boston; Edwin F. Schaefer, Buffalo; Martin A. Klein, New York; J. Marshall Boone, Baltimore, and George Donoghue, Chicago.

MAROONS HOLD WILDCATS TO 6-4 SCORE AT HALF

BY WILFRID SMITH.

For twenty minutes last night at Patten gymnasium, Chicago's fighting basketball team held Northwestern scoreless from the field. But the Wildcats could not be denied. They came back in the last period, smashing through the Maroons' defense to win their fifth consecutive conference victory, 31 to 16.

That first period, which ended with Northwestern leading, 6 to 4, only because it counted six of its eight free throws, was well nigh perfect defensive basketball. Each quintet had its quota of chances, but overeagerness apparently dulled that fine edge necessary for a perfect toss from the field. Then, too, Chicago's men, matching speed with speed, ever alert to cover instantly when Northwestern secured the ball, clamped on a man to man defense which the Wildcats could not penetrate.

Crowd of 5,800 Sees Game.

Northwestern's fans, a great majority of the capacity throng of 5,800, thrilled to the battle which saw first one and then the other of the metropolitan rivals race down the court only to fail to shoot the ball through the hoop when the chance was presented.

No Western conference teams ever were more evenly matched than were Chicago and Northwestern last night in the first period. For 16 minutes neither scored from the field. Then Sidney Yates, the Maroons' scoring hope in the battle to break Northwestern's string of victories, now reaching ten, banked a perfect shot from beyond the free throw circle, and thus the score remained 6 to 4 for the Wildcats at the rest period.

Parsons Helps Maroons.

Chicago was able to wage its fight on even terms because of Keith Parsons. Only once in the first half did this sophomore, who never had played basketball until this year, fail to give his teammates possession of the ball. But the second half was another story.

Northwestern lost no time in proving its superiority. Within two minutes Bert Riel, Northwestern captain, cut around Joe Reiff on the free throw line to receive a pass and count the Wildcats' first field goal. Seconds later, he added two free throws on Parsons' foul.

Momentarily Chicago rallied, but the pace soon became too swift. Marshall Fish counted two free throws on Bob McCarnes' personal and Parsons contributed an under the basket shot on a pass from Yates. Northwestern led, 10 to 8.

Reiff Scores for N. U.

Again the ball was tossed up at center. Now McCarnes was outjumping his opponent as effectively as he had been outjumped in the first period. Mac tapped the ball to Riel, who passed to Reiff over Porter's head and the big forward scored a pretty side line shot. Once more, before Chicago could gain possession, McCarnes tapped the ball. This time Riel turned, steadied himself and looped a long goal. Northwestern now led, 14 to 8, an advantage that became more emphatic as the minutes slowly passed.

Fish contributed two free throws on Bus Smith's foul to offset an under the board goal by Northwestern's back guard. Then the Wildcats' driving attack fairly buried Chicago's weakening defense.

Marshall intercepted a Maroon pass, cut down the court and counted on a short shot. Riel, McCarnes, Smith and then Reiff, in turn, followed Marshall's attack until the score board read: Northwestern, 25; Chicago, 10. No longer could Chicago's rooters hope for victory.

Yates Scores Thrice.

In the concluding minutes Yates broke through for three successive goals, the same number of points gath-

SIX DAY WHIRL STARTS TONIGHT WITH 15 TEAMS

Three Chicago Youths to Make Debut.

Fifteen teams will face the starter in the six day bicycle race which opens at 9 o'clock tonight in the Stadium. The hockey players, boxers, and ice skaters will step out of the limelight while the bike riders enjoy the spotlight for the week.

Five new riders will be introduced to the fans, three of the riders being Chicago amateurs who turned professional to ride in the race. The boys have made impressive showings in the amateur ranks, and John M. Chapman, manager of the grind, is confident they will do well. The other two newcomers are foreign stars.

Franklin Pair Entered.

The Chicago boys are Tony Schaller and Steve Wagner, who competed for Franklin Skating and Athletic club, and Alfred Marxer, who raced for the German-American Athletic club. Wagner and Schaller will ride as a team, while Marxer will be paired with Mickey Rodak, a Chicago youngster, who has had experience in six day races.

The new foreign stars are George Kroschel of Germany and Lew Elder of Toronto, Canada. Kroschel competed in fifteen races in Europe and placed in every one. Elder finished second in two races in Montreal.

The field is equally divided into foreign and American stars. There are fifteen of each. In the ranks of the foreigners are four Italians, three Belgians, two Frenchmen, two Germans, two Canadians, one Swiss, and one Australian.

Bobby Walthour Back.

An old favorite in the field will be Bobby Walthour Jr., son of one of the greatest all around bicycle riders who ever lived. Bobby hasn't competed here in two years. He again is back in the good graces of the powers that be.

Walthour was always a favorite at the Coliseum, and it is expected he will be well liked at the Stadium. Bobby has won six races and five of his victories have been scored in Chicago. He will ride with his cousin, Jimmy, and they are expected to make a formidable combination.

The outstanding American teams are Freddie Spencer and Norman Hill, Reggie McNamara and Charley Winter, and Bobby and Jimmy Walthour. Italy has two strong teams in Franco Georgetti and Paul Brocardo, and Gaetano Belloni and Pietro Linari. Georgetti and Brocardo won the last New York race and they finished second in the last grind here.

French Stars Paired.

France has a brilliant team in Alfred Letourner and Marcel Guimbretière. They won the last race here A team which will attract attention is the Belgian pair of Roger de Nef and Adolf Charlier. They finished third in the last Chicago race, second in New York, and then went to Brussels and won a six day bike race there.

Tony Beckman and Gerard Debaets, the Belgian-American team, have won three races while riding together. Germany will be represented by Paul Buschenhagen and George Kroschel, while Canada will have a sturdy team in William "Torchy" Peden and Lew Elder. The Swiss-American duo will be made up of Emil Richili and Bill Grimm, while the Australian team will be composed of Harris Horder and Harry Horan.

At 10 o'clock there will be a series of ten sprints for points, another series at 2 a. m. tomorrow, and again at 3 tomorrow afternoon. This will be repeated all week.

Krems Leads Holmes by 41 Pins as Bowling Duel Opens

BY HOWARD MARTIN.

Eddie Krems, one of the best of Chicago's army of bowling stars, assumed a 41 pin lead over Ray Holmes of St. Louis last night in the opening series of their 40 game match for a stake of $1,000. Krems knocked over 2,073 maples in ten games, while Holmes collected a 2,032 count.

They bombarded the pins on the Goldammer Harding alleys, where they will resume operations tonight at 8 o'clock. Krems will have to increase his margin tonight, for the final 20 games will be rolled on Holmes' drives in St. Louis next Saturday and Sunday.

The Chicago star piled up a big advantage in the first seven games, but slumped in the last three. While Krems was having trouble Holmes hung up the two best games of the night, 256 and 246, to keep within striking distance.

Their scores:

HOLMES	—	183	171	186	212	170	214

CHECKERS

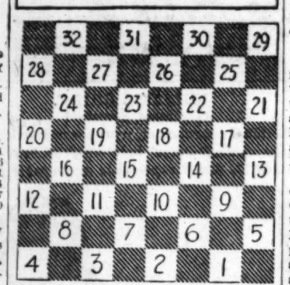
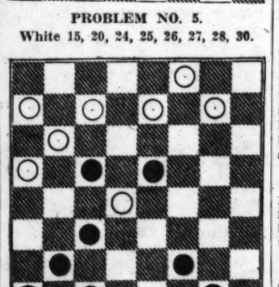
[American Champion.]



PROBLEM NO. 5.

White 15, 20, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30.



Black, 1, 3, 4, 6, 8, 11, 18, 19.

Black to move and win. Continue 11-16, 20-11, 18-23, 27-18, 6-10, 15-6, 8-31, 24-15, 1-19. Black wins.

The idea of this compound stroke is very useful in actual play and should always be kept in mind.

GAME NO. 5, SINGLE CORNER.

11-15	24-20	9-13	26-22-D 1-5
22-18	8-12	18-9	17-26 18-15
15-22	27-24	5-14	31-22 11-27
25-18	10-14-A	22-18	7-10-E 20-11
8-11	24-19	13-17	30-25 10-14-F
29-25	7-10	18-9	2-6 19-16
4-8	28-24-B	6-13	25-21 12-19
25-22	3-7	21-14	6-9 24-15
12-16	32-28-C	10-17	22-18 27-31-G

Black wins.

A—Varies from last week's play, where 10-15 was given.

B—Very weak, yet played regularly by the rank and file of players. The following play is best: 32-27, 9-13, 18-9, 5-14, 22-18, 1-5, 18-9, 5-14, 27-24, 3-7, 26-22, 14-17, 21-14, 10-26, 31-22, 7-10, 30-25, 10-14, 25-21, 13-17, 22-13, 6-9, 13-6, 2-9, 19-15, 11-27, 20-11, 27-31, 24-19, 31-27, 19-15, and white just escapes.

C—This move loses a possible draw. It may be found on 30-25, yet 9-13, 18-9, 5-14 leads to a powerful black ending.

F—Black must avoid the two for one shot by 19-16.

G—The above game is one of the best known losses in the single corner opening and must be mastered by all students who wish to develop into strong players. This game follows natural moves from the early opening and 90 per cent of all players will play into it at all times.

We are showing the games first and later will show more of the advanced play on this opening.

The student should study all problems at least five minutes before referring to the solution, as the five minute rule is always adopted among high class checker players. One should spend at least one hour on all games and two hours a week, if time permits. Two hours a week will develop one into a good amateur player within six months' time. The problem section will gradually get more difficult each week.

JOHN HOPKINS FACULTY VOTES TO ABANDON GRID

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 7.—(AP)—Two score members of the faculty of Johns Hopkins university have placed themselves on record for abandonment of intercollegiate football at the university.

Dean Edward W. Berry of the College of Arts and Sciences, who several days ago recommended abandonment of the grid game at the Baltimore university, in an address before the Baltimore chapter of the American Association of Professors today advocated ending all inter-collegiate athletic activity as far as Johns Hopkins was concerned.

Dr. Joseph S. Ames, president of the university, has appointed a committee to study the football situation, and said he would abide by its decision in continuation or abandonment of the fall game.

COLUMBIA BEATS ARMY.

New York, Feb. 7.—[U. P.]—Columbia defeated Army, 53 to 31, in a basketball game tonight. The score at the half was 24 to 10, Columbia leading all the way.

Conger across the line, but he never had a chance to catch the Iowa school master when Conger finally decided to run. Joe Sivak of Butler university, the other starter, was fourth.

George Spitz, New York university freshman, leaped to a new world's indoor high jump record of six feet seven inches, a quarter of an inch above Burt Nelson's old record. Nelson of Butler university was in the field Spitz defeated.

Osborn Is Second.

Harold Osborn, Illinois A. C. veteran, was second, clearing six feet six. Anton Burg, also of the Illinois A. C. and national outdoor champion, was third at six feet four. Nelson was fourth at six feet three.

Notre Dame Star Wins.

Alex Wilson, short but speedy racer from Notre Dame, won the Millrose "600" from an international field in the good time of 1:13:4, defeating among others Phil Edwards, former Negro star of New York university, and quarter mile champion of the British empire.

Edwards, Canadian Olympic star, competing for the Hamilton, Ont., Olympic club, was ten yards back in third place, some seven behind Eddie Roll of the Newark A. C., who set the pace most of the way. Clyde Blanchard of the Millrose A. A., was fourth and last.

Berlinger Injures Knee.

Fred Sturdy, former Yale star now competing for the Los Angeles A. C., won the pole vault at 13 feet 9 inches. Barney Berlinger, all around star of the University of Pennsylvania, was second at 13 feet 7½ inches. Berlinger split his kneecap in making his best height and was forced to forego an attempt at the higher bar.

Stella Walsh of Cleveland won the girl's invitation sprint final at 50 yards, defeating Mary Carew of Medford, Mass., her one time conqueror, by a yard in the comparatively slow time of 6.2.

Pumpkin Fishing for Ducks, Pump—Say, What Is This?

BY EDWARD BURNS.

Paul Waner, who at times seems to be dedicating his life to making Cub pitchers miserable, has been spending the winter down at Miami Beach fishing, swimming, golfing, reminiscing, and getting in shape to give the Cubs another spell of hell in 1931.

We recently played some golf with Paul, and were just getting ready to go fishing with him when somebody, possibly an agent of Pat Malone, Charley Root, or Guy Bush, burned his boat and $250 worth of fishing tackle.

When the fishing trip was called off Paul said maybe we would help him in his plan to popularize the sport of pumpkin fishing for ducks, but before we could help him out he admitted that he had met with a lot of discouragement in trying to establish the sport on account of the pelicans. Having had an inexplainable fear of pelicans since we were a very small boy, we decided not to help Paul.

An Old Mexican Pastime.

Although we never had heard of pumpkin fishing for ducks, we learned later from Paul that it is a very old sport in Mexico, and it was there that Mr. Waner first tried it and found it an especially fine and inexpensive way to capture mallards. He ridiculed us as being very ignorant when we admitted we never had heard of the technique.

According to Mr. Waner, the first requisite of pumpkin fishing is a pumpkin, the assumption being, of course, that there are ducks where the sport is to be practiced.

Mr. Waner couldn't believe we weren't kidding him when we asked what one was to do after he had a pumpkin and a place suspected of harboring ducks. Knowing we had been in Mexico, he insisted that if we had been in Mexico for more than one purpose we must have seen the sport.

Mr. Waner Tells All.

Assuming that possibly you never have seen the sport we'll quote Paul the rest of the way:

"After you have your pumpkin you put on your bathing suit and a belt with nooses suspended on it. Then you hollow out the pumpkin, as at Halloween, except that you don't cut any grotesque faces, which would scare the ducks.

"Next you put the pumpkin over your head and wade out into the water until the pumpkin has the appearance of floating on the water. Then you wait for the ducks.

"Now if there's anything that a duck is crazy about, it's pumpkin seeds, and it won't be long until a duck will attack your pumpkin, seeking to remove the seeds, he not knowing, of course, that you have removed the seeds in hollowing out the pumpkin.

Now Comes the Climax.

"When the duck lights on what he thinks is the floating pumpkin he is oblivious to the danger that lurks underneath and it is a simple matter to reach up out of the water and grab him. Quickly wring his neck and put him in one of the nooses on your belt, then become quiet again and wait for another duck in quest of pumpkin seeds. With a good, soft pumpkin and a degree of patience, you should have your belt full of ducks in from 25 minutes to a half hour."

Mr. Waner said that in Mexico he never practiced the sport without getting enough ducks for a week's eating, but that in a half dozen forays off the Florida coast he never had got a duck. It was at this point that he revealed about the pelicans.

Pelicans are hungrier than ducks and they are not good food either. Instead of being content with trying to get a few seeds and give way in favor of a duck, Mr. Waner said he found that a pelican would not desist until he had consumed the whole pumpkin.

Denuded of his pumpkin, Paul naturally felt a bit silly and futile, standing in water up to his neck, his plot exposed to all the water fowl in the vicinity. Added to this, Paul had to import his pumpkins from Mexico and as a consequence was constantly under suspicion of the Mediterranean fly inspectors, who still are awfully fussy about bringing any vegetables into Florida.

Caraway's Quail Story.

We told Mr. Waner about the way that Pat Caraway, White Sox left-hander, hunts for quail in Texas, which is next door to Mr. Waner's native Oklahoma. Pat says that in his county he hunts quail with a cowbell and a flashlight. The quail hears the cowbell and thinks it is a friendly cow. Then when the hunter gets right up to the quail he flashes the light on him, hypnotizing him. Pat says they always react down and feel a hypnotized quail, determining if he is fat enough to take.

Mr. Waner, who also is a left-hander, said he'd never met Pat, but that he'd like to sometime.

Think of the fun they could have out hunting together if they both were in the same league.

PITT DEFEATS NOTRE DAME IN OVERTIME, 35-32

Two Baskets, Free Throw Rout Irish.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 7.—(AP)—After getting off to a good start, the Notre Dame basketball team failed to keep up the pace and was beaten out in an extra period by the University of Pittsburgh here tonight, 35 to 32. It was the second time this season the Panthers had won from the South Benders in an extra period game.

The Irish, due to the accurate shooting and passing of De Cook and Crowe in the first ten minutes took a 10 to 6 lead, but a series of fouls and breaks ing down of a tight zone offense allowed Pitt to take a one point lead just before the half. Crowe dropped a long one to put the Irish back in the lead, 12 to 11, as the half ended.

The second period was a seesaw battle, ending 30 to 30. In the extra stanza Pitt slipped through for two field goals and picked up an extra point on a foul while Notre Dame was sinking a long shot.

De Cook and Crowe worked a nice offensive attack during the first half, the former feeding and taking the long ones and Crowe working under the basket. The play was broken up in the second half by the diminutive Lawry, who, although a substitute, co-starred with Kowallis for Pitt.

The weakness of the Irish on the foul line as compared to Pitt really was the deciding factor. Pitt sank 11 to Notre Dame's 4. Lineup:

BRUINS WHIP CANADIENS.

MONTREAL, Feb. 7.—(AP)—The Boston Bruins crushed the offensive of the Montreal Canadiens tonight to win, 2 to 1, in one of the most exciting National Hockey league games played here this season.

The Bruins played a steady game and with a strong defense featuring Eddie Shore and George Owen, halted the Habitants. The Bruins came from behind in the first period and rapped in two goals to take the lead. They then settled down to cool steady hockey that held the Canadiens at bay despite the speed of Howie Morenz and Pete Lepine.

NOBODY'S BUSINESS ... By WESTBROOK PEGLER

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—The ideal solution of the football problem has been hit upon in the state of Iowa, where the legislature is beginning to assert its authority in the conduct of the game at the state university. It develops that a committee of politicians known as the house committee on state educational institutions, by virtue of its authority as general overseer of the state schools, also regards itself as the final authority on football in those schools of which the state university is one.

The committee has presented a resolution deploring the disgrace which overtook not only the state university but the entire state when, in 1929, the university was convicted of hiring football players at a very low rate of pay. The resolution expresses no humiliation because the players were hired nor because they were grievously underpaid in proportion to their drawing powers, but the fact that the subsidies were found out and proven is held against Dr. Walter Jessup, the president of the school, as a serious offense. As a holder of a political office, the learned doctor has had to answer to the politicians of the state legislature, a fact which seemed to be weighing on his mind at Iowa's trial before the Western conference two years ago.

Judges Guilty, Too, But Not Crude.

Incidentally, most of the schools which sat as prosecutors and judges in the trial were quite as guilty as the University of Iowa, but not in the same crude way, and Iowa was suspended not so much for proselyting and subsidizing as for the clumsy management of the job.

Certainly, some at the University of Iowa should have been fired in this case, but the sporting point of view and the political point of view are not alike. From the sporting standpoint, the unpardonable offense occurred when Iowa squealed on her pals, exposing and renouncing the proselyted and subsidized athletes in order to obtain reinstatement in the Western conference. The Western conference was not very sporting when it accepted this amend because all concerned, every one who took sufficient interest to study the case, realized that the university was the master mind and the athletes mere tools as the detectives call them. The players, themselves, refused to squeal on their school.

A similar case occurred in Hartford, Conn., a few years ago when a local criminal who had taken part in a murder with Gerald Chapman turned state's evidence and sent Chapman to the gallows. Like the proselyted and subsidized athletes of the University of Iowa, Chapman trusted his pal too much.

Athletes Didn't Lead School Astray.

This may be regarded as an unkind simile, but the fact is that the ethics of the University of Iowa were even worse than those of Chapman's pal because he was not the master mind. He may have told himself that he had been led astray. The university could not claim to have been led astray by a number of high school athletes, even though it be admitted that high school athletes, particularly those whose opinions of themselves are exaggerated by their home town sport editors, who elect them to all-state and all-tri-county teams, are quite precocious regarding the matter of inducements.

It is strange that Iowa is so sensitive about a suspension of the university's football team from the Western conference for an offense which most of the court were guilty of; but that is politics, and I foresee a great future for football under political direction.

Under this management appointments to the teams will be strictly political and the Iowa state legislature will trade the Illinois legislature a victory on the football field in return for the indorsement of an amendment to the national constitution forbidding mixed burial in the graveyards as being contrary to decent morals. The football coaches will be appointed by the governors and will be selected like all other patronage, from the boys who deliver the electoral districts.

The Illinois coach, who will be a wholesale bootlegger, will get his football squad plastered in a roadhouse on the night before the game and the Iowa team, being strictly political, will doublecross Illinois on the afternoon of the game and beat them 85 to 0. This will be done under the coaching of a radio preacher who will be known as the fighting parson, as Iowa is very susceptible to parsons, particularly the kind who call themselves fighting parsons and spring the trap at executions with the newspaper cameras bearing on the scenes.

This Thing Would Go On and On.

Illinois will then send an entertainment committee to Iowa City to shoot up the Iowa team with Thompson guns, but the Iowa squad will be off attending a national political convention and they will be singing "Out Where the Tall Corn Grows" in a hotel room with relays of bellboys wearing a groove in the corridor bringing cracked ice.

Thus the row will pass beyond the immediate control of the two legislatures and ascend to Washington, D. C., where the Iowa delegation, in order to square things with Illinois, will agree to use their influence with the department of justice to obtain a pardon for an Illinois bank robber in a federal prison who is in very bad health and wishes to go abroad for a long trip.

Under political control the cost of football pants will rise to $25 a leg and the slogan, "Football for all," will lead to the purchase of 500,000 football uniforms every year from contractors who will be good party men. The pants will be limited to usage for one game only by an order of the public health department which will issue a paper through the state printing office pointing out that soiled football pants might contain tetanus germs and that while they might be laundered it is better to be sure than sorry.

Victory Goes to Highest Bidder.

This will have cost the sporting goods lobby $500,000, or $50,000 more than the unsuccessful laundry men's lobby was willing to spend.

Of course, there will be searching probes of one kind and another, but football, like state government, will be almost perfect under political control, and practically all of the evils of the game in its present deplorable state will be abolished.

It is a very good idea which the committee on state education institutions of the lower house of the Iowa legislature has originated.

NATIONAL LEAGUE FLAG MAY WAVE AT PIRATES' PARK

Club Is Strong if It Can Shake Injury Jinx.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

In shopping around for a potential pennant winner in the impending National league race, it might not be a bad idea to give consideration to the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Hinting that the crowd of athletes in the pay of Barney Dreyfuss might cover enough ground to get some place is not especially new, although hazardous. Every spring since they copped their last flag in 1927, subsequently being plastered in four straight by the Yankees in the world's series, it has been customary to name them among those with a good chance to succeed; but they always flopped on the prediction. However, the flops weren't exactly due to a lack of ability. The squad simply couldn't withstand the ravages of a chronic jinx which exercises its power by selecting this or that athlete as a patient for unexpected injuries or ailments. But such things can't continue forever.

• Thevenow Bolsters Infield.

The best reason for suspecting the Pirates are going to be considerably tougher in 1931 than they were last season is Tommy Thevenow. As a shortstop Tommy is as skillful as he is luckless. A mere gesture by a Cub infielder caused him to make a move that broke his leg in 1927. He went to the Phillies as a damaged article, and a spring camp auto smashup in 1929 gave him another setback. But he played enough with the Phillies last season to indicate that he had recovered all his old time skill. That's why the Pirates dealt for and obtained him.

It was short that gave the Pirates one of several sources of annoyance last year. Bartell, now gone to the Phillies, where the usual Philly luck probably will develop him into something worth while, was an erratic performer. He turned in any number of sensational plays almost daily, but the play on which the ball game depended usually was the one he kicked. Thevenow isn't that kind of a fielder. He also will hit better than his predecessor.

Expect Traynor to Hit Peak.

The remainder of the Pirate infield probably will be made up as of last season. Gus Suhr will be at first, George Grantham at second, and Pie Traynor at third. Suhr is no sensation, but a year's experience should cause him to improve slightly. Grantham is unsteady in the field and never will be any different, but he always can hit. Traynor was off form in the last race, which means he will be back at his peak in the next venture. Traynor and Thevenow at their best means the Pirates will have the most effective pair the majors can produce on the left side of the diamond.

Manager Ens hopes to put into action an outfield involving the services of Paul and Lloyd Waner and Adam Comorosky. The latter is good enough as a fly catcher, and always is to be regarded with caution as a hitter. The Waner boys require no ballyhooing. Paul came close to being peddled this winter, but not for want of ability. Illness kept Baby Lloyd inactive for a big portion of the 1930 campaign, and his absence undoubtedly cost the Pirates more wins than could be counted on one finger.

Pitching's the Question.

If the regulars so far mentioned can be kept away from injuries or other mishaps, pitching becomes the one thing that will keep the Bucs from a pennant, if anything does. This item was given first consideration last fall when the time ripened for the gathering of 1931 possibilities. That accounts for fourteen hurlers being enrolled. Six of these were present last season, their names being Brame, French, Kremer, Meine, Spencer, and Swetonic. Injuries or illness hit all of them at one time or another in the last campaign.

An addition that may be of some importance is Claude Willoughby, who was included in the deal with the Phillies. The lad never has been a bad pitcher, but his company no doubt embarrassed him. Supported by a team such as the Pirates, he might surprise a few people. Another outstanding possibility is George Grant, who a couple of years ago put on a long string of wins for the Cleveland club. Since then he rehabilitated himself as a member of the Rochester International league team.

Women Find Fencing Ideal for Reducing

BY BETTY ECKERSALL.

Fencing may be unfamiliar to some Chicago women, but not to those who are retaining their school girl figures. It is a pleasant way of reducing, and has no age limit. One may participate at the age of 75 or five.

Fencing is a combination of all sports. It often is prescribed by doctors, for the exercise can be as light or as rigorous as the patient desires.

Contrary to general belief among men, women are quicker in mastering the intricacies of the sport. They are more graceful, persistent, and courageous. And they are more amenable to suggestions.

Compete Against Men.

"A man," says Edmond Clermont of the Franco-American National Academy of Fencing, "after one lesson, wants to be on his own. After two lessons, he tries to inveigle his friends to stand him, and after three he will take on the world. In all our tournaments, which are held under the auspices of the Chicago and Illinois Fencing club, the women fence with men. And, despite the theory of gallantry, there are few men who take their defeats graciously."

Fencing is a great aid to backward children, experts in the sport declare. It teaches coördination, quicker mental response, and above all poise and confidence. After two or three attempts in dodging a foil jab, I, too, felt that "quicker mental response."

Business women, wishing to correct rounded shoulders and poor carriage, have been the most religious devotees of fencing. It is a sport within the means of most pocketbooks. Many girls, from various offices, attend in groups, and the interoffice rivalry is spirited.

Fencing in High Schools.

Fencing is taught in three Chicago public high schools. Lake View has the largest class, while Austin and Waller are second and third, respectively.

Women were permitted to compete with men for the first time last spring. This took place in Paris, and a woman placed second.

Four Chicago clubs are sponsoring fencing. They are the Racquet club, Illinois Women's Athletic club, Lake Shore Athletic club, and the Chicago Women's club. The men seem to like the sport just as well as women, and the attendance is about evenly divided.

Trumping friend wife's ace no longer is the chief cause of a rift in home life. Breaking her favorite foil is becoming as serious.

George Meets Pat McGill on Mat Tomorrow

Edward Don George, former University of Michigan wrestler, will defend his claims to the world's heavyweight wrestling championship tomorrow night at Harmon's Dreamland against Pat McGill, veteran heavyweight, who has just returned from Australia. They will wrestle to a finish, best two out of three falls.

Joe Stecher, the Iowa wrestling favorite a few years ago, will make his first Chicago appearance in years. He will clash with young Karol Zbyszko of Poland, in the semi-windup.

Johnny Meyers, former middleweight champ, will meet Heinie Engel of Dubuque; Pietro Bacini, Italian title claimant, meets George Kogut, Polish grappler, and Carl Schultz, 250 pound German, is matched with Cyclone Jack Roberts in the other bouts.

Greek Meets Greek.

Greek meets Greek when Jim Londos, claimant of the world's heavyweight wrestling championship, and George Zaharias clash in the windup of Promoter Doc Krone's show at the Coliseum Feb. 18, but the countrymen of the two principals are not particularly pleased over the meeting, it is reported, contending that two Greek wrestlers should not be matched.

Ed White, Londos' manager, yesterday stated that he consented to the match because Zaharias had made himself the logical opponent to meet Londos in what is billed as a championship bout.

The special committee is fostering the expansion program under which clubs within a radius of 200 miles are eligible for membership in the association. Galesburg, Ill., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—A free throw in the last minute of play by Ralfoth, substitute forward, gave Lawrence a 21 to 20 victory over Knox here tonight. It was the third consecutive game that the Siwash quintet lost by a margin of one point.

The teams played evenly throughout, Lawrence having a one point lead at the half. Laird, Lawrence center, was high scorer with six points. Lineup:

Horace Mann and Froebel Prep Cage Teams Victors

Gary, Ind., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Gary High school basketball stock soared upward tonight as the result of victories turned in by Horace Mann and Froebel teams. Horace Mann defeated Shelbyville, outstanding southeastern Indiana representative, 28 to 10. The defeat was Shelbyville's second in seventeen games. Froebel went to Laporte to hand the high school team of that city its third defeat of the season, 17 to 16.

Guy Bush to Lead Cage Team Against Cicero Elks

Guy Bush, Cub pitcher, will make his debut in Chicago as a basketball player Tuesday night when he leads the Guy Bush All-Stars against the Cicero Elks at the new Cicero stadium, 52d avenue and 21st street. Bush will play center.

winding up with the championship bouts on Friday night.

The sectional tournaments conducted by the Springfield State Register, the Danville Commercial-News and the Vincennes Sun Commercial will open on Tuesday. The meets in Springfield and Vincennes will continue for two days and the tournament at Danville will be going for three days. Many of the best amateur boxers in Illinois and Indiana will take part in these tournaments. Johnny Emmerick, the Springfield flyweight champion, who won his bout against New York's champion last year, is expected to compete as a bantamweight in the Springfield tournament this week.

The Lafayette Journal-Courier's sectional tournament will be under way on Wednesday night. Preliminaries will be fought then. The semi-finals are to be held on Feb. 18 and the championship bouts will take place on Feb. 24. There are nearly 100 entries in the Lafayette tournament. Only 46 entered the meet there last year.

Wheaton Fights Friday.

Nearer Chicago, the Du Page county tournament will be held at the Wheaton High school gymnasium on Friday and Saturday nights. The winners will then take part in either the north or west section meets in Chicago.

The first of the sectional tournaments was complet : at Davenport last week. A team that is 50 per cent stronger than the one which represented the Davenport Times a year ago has been selected, in the opinion of veteran fistic followers in the Tri-Cities of Davenport, Rock Island, and Moline. Buzz Green, the blonde butcher boy, again is the heavyweight representative. He slayed his rivals in the sectional meet, knocking all of them out, and is a much improved fighter since last year.

In every section of Chicago the amateur boxers are warming up to the training tasks. Most of the entries received so far have come from individual glove swingers. The team entries will begin rolling in today and tomorrow. More than a dozen of the more pretentious gymnasiums in Chicago will enter teams and strive for the team trophy against the sixteen teams which will invade the tournament from all parts of Chicagoland.

No Letup in Socking.

There will be no letup in the firing until late in the last week in February, for aside from the three big sectional tournaments in Chicago, other tournaments are to be conducted by the Journal-Transcript in Peoria, by the Morning Star in Rockford, the Journal Gazette in Fort Wayne, by the Post-Tribune in Gary, the Dispatch in Michigan City, the Times-Press in Streator, the Tribune in Kokomo, and the News-Palladium in Benton Harbor before all the teams are selected.

Then the big drama will begin to unfold at the Coliseum on March 2, 3, and 4. These battles will carry the boys through to the championships, which will be decided at the Chicago Stadium on the night of March 11.

Silver Skates Champion Wins Canadian Title

OTTAWA, Ont., Feb. 7.—(AP)—Winning two races each today in the second half of the program, Ross Robinson, who won THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE Silver Skates Derby in 1927, and Jean Wilson captured the men's and women's Canadian national speed skating championships. Each had taken a big lead on the opening day.

Miss Wilson added the North American championship to her collection as well, for she won every women's event. The races in the women's division were for both titles.

Scores 120 Points.

Today the speedy Toronto girl captured the 220 yard and three quarter mile races to pile up the maximum total of 120 points. Six rivals were tied for second place with 20 points each. They were Mrs. Leila Brooks Potter of Toronto, last year's North American champion; Loretta Nietzel of Detroit; Lillian Corke, New York; Hattie Donaldson, Toronto; Rose Marie Brady, Detroit, and Elizabeth Dubois, Chicago.

In the senior men's division Robinson won the 440 yard and three-quarter mile races today and finished second to Charles Delpier of Detroit in the five mile race. With his first, second and third place in yesterday's races, this performance gave him a total of 140 points and possession of the title for the second straight year.

Alex Hurd of Hamilton, Ont., and Frank Stack, former Winnipeg skater now competing for the Illinois Western Skating association of Chicago, each scored 60 points. Delpier, who made a brilliant finish to win the five mile event, took fourth place with 50 points.

Stundl Double Victor.

In addition to her clean sweep of the championships, Miss Wilson captured a special women's mile race, with Lillian Corke second.

Edwin Stundl, youthful Chicago speedster, turned in two more fine performances in the boys' intermediate class races today. He won the mile race, beating Albert Walters of Toronto and Walter Mulligan of Ottawa and finished second to Mulligan in the two mile event, with Kenneth Walters third.

Summaries of today's championship events:

HARVEY MEETS DUNDEE FRIDAY IN GARDEN BOUT

New York, Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Len Harvey, middleweight champion of England, and Vince Dundee of Baltimore will lead the parade of boxing events in New York next week with a twelve round return bout on Friday night at Madison Square Garden.

A few weeks ago Dundee outpointed the Briton in a lively bout. There was a wide difference of opinion as to the justice of the verdict, so a return bout was inevitable.

Keeps Hair Neat

Rich-looking, Orderly

If your hair lacks natural gloss and lustre, or is difficult to keep in place it is very easy to give it that rich, glossy, refined and . . . orderly appearance . . . so essential to well-groomed men.

Just rub a little Glostora through your hair . . . once or twice a week . . . or after shampooing, and your hair will then stay, each day . . . just as you comb it.

Glostora softens the hair and makes it pliable. Then—even stubborn hair—will stay in place of its own accord.

It gives your hair that natural, rich, well-groomed effect, instead of leaving it stiff and artificial looking as pastes do.

Glostora also keeps the scalp soft, and the hair healthy by restoring the natural oils from which the hair derives its health, life, gloss and lustre.

Try it!—See how easy it is to keep your hair combed—any style you like—whether brushed lightly or combed down flat. If you want your hair to lie down particularly smooth and tight, after applying Glostora, simply moisten your hair with water before brushing it.

AMERICAN DERBY HEADS CARD AT WASHINGTON PK.

Renew Traditional 3 Year Old Race June 20.

The American Derby, carrying a $50,000 prize in added money, is to be the feature of the racing program to be offered during the Washington Park season which opens on May 25 and closes on June 27.

The traditional race, first run at old Washington Park in 1884 and moved to the new turf grounds near Homewood four years ago, will be renewed on Saturday, June 20, it was announced yesterday by C. W. Hay, general manager of the Washington Park course.

The race is for 3 year olds, and as usual will be at a mile and a quarter. Such famous horses as Modesty, Spokane, Boundless, Pink Coat, Sidney Lucas, Robert Waddell, The Pickett, Highball, Boot to Boot, Hydromel, and Toro have won the old fixtures in years past. Last year, the longshot, Reveille Boy, ran the greatest race of his life and was the winner from Gallant Knight.

See Large Entry.

The American Derby, run a month later than the Kentucky Derby, should attract a field that will include every great 3 year old in training. It does not conflict with any of the rich stakes for 3 year olds that are run in May in New York, Maryland and Kentucky.

Aside from the American Derby, six other well endowed fixtures are to be renewed at Washington Park. The complete stake program follows:

WASHINGTON PARK HANDICAP—3 Year Olds and Up, 1¼ Miles	$5,000
THE DEBUTANTE STAKES—2 Year Old Fillies, 5½ Furlongs	5,000
THE THOMAS CURRAN MEMORIAL 2 Year Old Colts and Geldings, 5½ Furlongs	5,000
THE ROBERT M. SWEITZER HANDICAP—3 Year Olds and Up, 1¼ Miles	5,000
THE AMERICAN DERBY—3 Year Olds, 1¼ Miles, to be run Saturday, June 20	50,000
THE ILLINOIS OAKS—3 Year Old Fillies, 1¼ Miles	10,000
THE FRANCIS S. PEABODY MEMORIAL—3 Year Olds and Up, 1¼ Miles	10,000

Stakes Total of $90,000.

The closing date for these stakes has not been determined, but it will be in late April or early May, General Manager Hay said.

The seven stakes for the Washington Park season total $90,000 in added money, the same as last year. There will be no reduction in the value of overnight handicaps or in purse events, the Washington Park officials indicated.

Col. Matt J. Winn, president of the American Turf association, who worked with Mr. Hay in preparing the stake program before departing on a vacation trip yesterday for Biloxi, Miss., said he would not be surprised if the American Derby entry list this year exceeds the entry list of the Kentucky Derby. And he expects the starting field to be equally as strong.

Northwestern Beats Chicago Cagers, 31-16

ered by the Wildcats, many of whom now were reserve players.

As Northwestern's team performed last night, there could have been no other result. Where Chicago had given its best in the first half, Northwestern reserved its power until the final minutes. Superior height and control of the ball at center were handicaps Chicago could not overcome.

Moreover, Northwestern's well balanced attack [every regular scored at least one field goal] put the pressure on all of the Maroon guards.

N. U. Makes 13 Free Throws.

Capt. Fish was effective against Reiff on the pivot play, but Joe got his pair of goals and counted three free throws in as many attempts. Northwestern's surprising showing at the penalty line [scoring 13 free throws in 17 tries] was all important in the drive to victory. Correspondingly, Chicago, which had led the conference in this department, only was successful in 6 out of 14 throws.

Penalties Nearly Even.

The penalties were divided almost evenly. Northwestern was called 11 times for illegal play, while Chicago was penalized 12 times.

Tomorrow night Minnesota, undisputed second place quintet, with four victories and one defeat, meets the Wildcats at Patten gymnasium. The game may determine the championship, since a Northwestern victory will provide a two game advantage over the field, while defeat will tie the contending teams. Minnesota's disadvantage in playing on Northwestern's floor may be offset by the fact that the Gophers did not play last night.

EDITORS FIGHT FOR SAFE ROADS LEADS TO LIBEL

Wisconsin Man Sued by Engineer.

BY HAL FOUST.

FORT ATKINSON, Wis.—[Special.]—A $20,000 libel suit has grown out of a bitter dispute over the merits of recent work on the roads hereabouts. The roads are known to Chicago motorists who frequent this territory on summer holidays, attracted by the quiet scenery of the hills, valleys and lakes, and by the historical associations of this Rock river town where Gen. Atkinson, pursuing Black Hawk's Indians, encamped in 1832 with troops that included Abraham Lincoln and Jefferson Davis.

The defendant in the law suit is Halbert L. Hoard, editor of the Jefferson County Union, a weekly newspaper that has been conducting a vigorous campaign against "deep and dangerous" roadside ditches. He is a son of the late W. D. Hoard, who was governor of Wisconsin from 1889 to 1891.

Road Commissioner Sues.

The plaintiff is Henry J. Greil, Jefferson county highway commissioner. He was appointed to this position by the county board of supervisors in November of 1926. The salary is $2,400 a year. He alleges that the newspaper's editorials on road ditches have been false and defamatory, injurious to his reputation.

"My newspaper," said Mr. Hoard, "is trying to perform a service for the motorists of this county just as THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE serves the motorists of Chicagoland. We are pointing out defects in our road system that they might be corrected.

"There is nothing personal and nothing political in the Jefferson County Union's campaign to remove deep and dangerous ditches. Our sole motive is to make the roads safer and easier to drive for the residents of this county and for our visitors.

Deep Ditches Dangerous.

"Jefferson county, for the last two years, has been digging steep ravines that will turn over a car that blows a tire or skids in loose gravel. The Wisconsin highway department, on its roads, does not have these deep ditches; it obtains drainage by building wide shoulders with a gentle slope."

Examples of excerpts from the Jefferson County Union that are quoted in the court pleading are:

"Ordinary people getting killed on account of fool highway engineering don't amount to much in the public eye. There is always an alibi for the engineer—the wrecked car was going too fast to suit their bum roads, or something else. . . . ."

"Our highway engineers belong to a past age—the age of the ox team. There were no blowouts when the present crop of engineers was born—just tired oxen—and side ditches were tolerably safe."

Mr. Greel, interviewed at his home in Johnson Creek, said he had no objection to constructive criticism of his work, but that the weekly newspaper's editorials were hurting his reputation and endangering his present means of livelihood. He added that his drainage ditches were unofficially approved by engineers of the state highway department.

Fort Atkinson is 111 miles from Chicago on route U. S. 12.

VOICE OF THE TRAFFIC

ELEVATED HIGHWAYS.

Chicago, Feb. 5.—It was with a great deal of pleasure that I read the article by Eugene S. Taylor in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE of Jan. 25. Not having seen anything about elevated highways in newspapers since the west side highway bond defeat, I thought that Chicago was resigned to its fate of using surface streets in the solution of its traffic problems.

It seems that it takes much more to educate the people of Chicago than it does in any other large city. Why cannot the newspapers run a campaign of educating the people of Chicago in modern traffic relief? Some of the stanch supporters of the opening of Congress street point with pride to the lake shore drives as a successful solution of transportation but fail to mention that these drives do not have cross traffic, neither do they have much pedestrian traffic to consider.

I have spent six years in New York and other large cities. When I settled in Chicago last year, I thought that Chicago's streets were by far the poorest kept streets that I had encountered up till that time. What struck me as the most apparent was the utter lack of planning for through traffic wishing to go through Chicago. Although attempts have been made to widen streets, these are but poor attempts at speeding traffic as long as cross traffic and pedestrians must be considered.

I have often wondered why the people of Chicago did not start propaganda in favor of traffic relief. It is very easy to resign oneself to conditions. I have gradually become acquainted with the better paved streets and have used these even though the distance is greater. I live in Jefferson Park and must drive a distance of 14 miles to go downtown a distance of ten miles in a straight line. I have often also wondered how people arriving in Chicago at the northwestern end find their way to the loop. Surely, I am sure it would be almost impossible to find worse streets anywhere than Elston avenue and Milwaukee avenue. These are the only direct routes to the loop from about six excellent highways ending at the northwestern end of Chicago and on which great amounts have been spent.

S. A. JACQUES.

INSURANCE SUGGESTION.

Chicago, Feb. 3.—As there seems to be no way of stopping the needless killing and maiming of thousands of pedestrians each year, the following plan is suggested to protect the victims without placing a great hardship on the drivers.

Every car should carry sufficient insurance to protect the public, premiums payable in monthly installments. A sticker or tag to be issued each month when installment is paid, same to be placed on front of car so all traffic officers and the general public may see it. No car to be allowed on the street without monthly tag. Insurance carried by all cars would materially reduce the rate on all forms of auto policies.

A. B. C. DRIVER.

COMPULSORY INSURANCE.

Chicago, Feb. 2.—Last year at Boston, liability insurance on a popular priced car cost $53 for a $5,000-$10,000 policy, compared with $33 at Chicago. Apparently, the Massachusetts law compelling car owners to carry insurance is not conducive to reduction in accidents, as we are occasionally led to believe.

L. H. HORACE.

A LITTLE CIVILITY.

Oak Park, Ill., Feb. 2.—I have always wondered by what authority, policemen in Chicago are allowed to talk in the abusive way they do to motorists who have committed what they consider an infraction of rules. I have had three experiences in the last year, and the last one about burned me up.

Recently, I approached the crossing of Clark street and Grand avenue, going west, a little after 5 o'clock. Like the drivers of several cars ahead of me, I had not observed that the crossing was torn up and that it would be impossible to cross. The officer on duty hollered to the drivers of the cars ahead, to turn around and go back. This they proceeded to do as quickly as they could in the narrow space available, but not quickly enough to suit him. He continued to holler at them, waving his arms like a madman as he did so.

Naturally, it was necessary for me to wait until the cars in front of me had turned, before I was able to, but this delay was too much for our friend and he hollered at me at the top of his voice, "Come on, get out of here, hurry up." A street car about to pass, delayed me further, and at this he rushed over, pulled open the door, and said, "Back up, get out of here, you had no business coming down here."

It would seem that all of the inconvenience caused everybody concerned, could have been avoided by having, at the corner of Grand and Dearborn, an officer to prevent you from entering the block through which there was no exit.

I believe that the majority of motorists are very willing to abide by the rules which have been made for them, but even in case of their wrongdoing, I fail to see why any officer is privileged to talk to them as if they were hardened criminals. On an occasion like the above, such discourtesy is inexcusable.

A little civility would help a lot.

Archery Expert Beats Golfer at His Own Game

Mill Valley, Cal., Feb. 7.—(AP)—An archer beat a golfer at his own game today while a lacrosse player finished third in a freak 18 hole match of individual skill at the Mill Valley Country club course.

Using bow and arrows, Fred Keast shot a 72, while Frank Walsh, the golfer, turned in a 74. Walsh used but one club. Fred Burden, a councilman of Mill Valley and former captain of the Westminster, Ont., lacrosse team, had a 78. Burden played with a lacrosse net but used a regulation golf ball.

The golfer had to hole all putts, whereas the archer and lacrosse player were conceded putts when their shots were four feet from the cup.

BRUINS MEET FT. WAYNE AT WHITE CITY TONIGHT

The Chicago Bruins will make their first appearance of the season on the south side tonight when they meet Fort Wayne in an American Professional Basketball league game at White City as the headliner on a three game program.

Whitey Wickhorst, Bruin forward, will be honored by several hundred friends from Whiting, Ind., his home town.

Sharing interest with the pro match will be another meeting between the House of David and the Taylor Trunk girls. The Davids will have their full strength on the floor for the first time this season. The opening game will bring together the Herbert Victors of Whiting, Ind., and the Redeemer Church five.

The Bruins-Hoosiers match promises plenty of action. Games between these teams in the past have produced some of the best basketball in the pro league. Another factor that should heighten the rivalry will be the appearance of Borgeman and Miller, former Hoosiers, in the Bruin lineup.

The Bruins are still in the running for the pro title but they will need this game to remain among the contenders.

STORM, 9 TO 1, VICTOR IN $3,000 GULF HANDICAP

Robertson Rides Six Winners in Two Days.

New York, Feb. 7.—(AP)—Albert Robertson, second string jockey for C. V. Whitney, who rode four winners at Miami yesterday, came back today with a brilliant exhibition of horsemanship.

Accepting four mounts at Hialeah Park, Robertson rode two of them to victory and placed second on another. His first triumph was astride the California's Traitor, which paid $4.20, and was followed by a sensational ride aboard Angry, winner of the Perrine handicap. The second place came on G. C. Winfrey's Toney Joe in the curtain event of the program.

Sidney Grant Wins.

Robertson had no mount in the Hialeah Park handicap, the mile and one-sixteenth feature. This event went to A. Bartelstein's Sidney Grant, which defeated the Belair stud's Peto, the favorite, by a length after a hard battle in the stretch. Raccoon, from the Brookemeade stable, was distant third.

Sidney Grant was forced to run one of his best races to take the purse of $2,580, stepping the route in 1:44 2-5—just one-fifth of a second off the track record, held by Fairy Maiden. The Bartelstein runner paid $13.20 for $2.

Given little consideration in a race in which L. M. Severson's Paul Bunyan was the favorite, Storm carried the silks of Mrs. H. Pyne to victory in the $3,000 Edgewater Gulf handicap at the Fair Grounds, New Orleans.

Finishes Fast in Stretch.

For the first part of the mile and an eighth journey he was rated off the pace, but came strong in the stretch to defeat B. S. Michell's Yankee Doodle by a length and a half and pay $21.60 for $2 in the mutuels. Third went to Sister Zoe from the Four Oaks stock farm.

The Santa Clara purse, feature of the holiday card at Oriental Park, Havana, went to Al Livingston from the Caimito stable, a 4 to 1 shot. Nearest him at the finish of a mile and a quarter was A. G. Tarn's Lancer, while in third place trailed H. C. Hatch's Canadian owned African, an outstanding handicap performer two years ago when racing for the late R. T. Wilson.

NAVY DEFEATS NORTHWESTERN MATMEN, 21-13

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 7.—[Special.]—By taking the first five bouts with falls or decisions, the Naval academy defeated Northwestern wrestlers here this afternoon, 21 to 13.

The Navy's total was made up of three falls and two decisions. The visitors took falls in the light heavyweight and heavyweight classes and a decision in the 165 pound division.

The feature bout was between Silverstein, a Chicago midshipman, and Garrigan, Northwestern's captain, in the 155 pound class. Nearly nine minutes passed before the Navy matman pinned his opponent. It was Silverstein's fifteenth straight victory.

STANDARD OIL OF N. Y., VACUUM DEAL APPROVED

Merger Plans Are Upheld by Court.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 7.—(AP)—Holding it would not be in violation of the historic Standard Oil dissolution decree of 1909, three judges of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals here today approved merger of the Standard Oil Company of New York and the Vacuum Oil company.

The judges held the merger would not result in a combination in restraint of trade and would not result in nullifying the effect of the anti-trust act, as had been contended by government counsel.

The merger would bring together the Standard of New York [Socony] with $134,000,000 capital stock and $708,000,000 assets and the Vacuum company with $128,000,000 capital stock and $265,000,000 assets, in a worldwide diversified petroleum products corporation.

The 1909 decree, handed down in the eastern Missouri District court, dissolved the Standard Oil company of New Jersey and forbade its 37 oppo[sed] companies, including Standard of New York and Vacuum, to form any new combination in restraint of trade.

Government May Appeal.

The decision today was written by Circuit Judge Kimbrough Stone and concurred in by Circuit Judges Wilbur F. Booth and A. K. Gardner. They formed a special three judge court for the eastern Missouri district which, for convenience, sat at Omaha the week of last Oct. 6.

The government indicated it would appeal the decision to the Supreme court which in 1911 upheld the original decree in the dissolution suit.

The judges found that the "intent and purpose of the merger is solely to meet the normal and natural business necessities of the two companies, brought about by the development of and the changed competitive and business conditions in the industry."

The present condition of the oil industry, the judges said, is "that of integrated companies having an ownership of crude, refining capacity, producing gasoline, lubricants, and other petroleum products, selling to each retailer or to the consumer as near a complete line of products as the consumer uses. The unquestionable tendency is, as to a very important class of customers, the owners of automobiles, to sell direct to the consumer and to sell both gasoline and oil at the same time and place."

Gasoline and Lubricants.

The chief product of Socony, as shown by the evidence, is gasoline, while the chief product of Vacuum, in which it has built up a worldwide trade, is lubricants. Socony also sells lubricants and at some points is in competition, but the judges held that this competition is not of such extent as to be of vital importance to the whole oil industry.

The judges found that the inducement for the Socony to enter the merger is expansion, but that with Vacuum the situation is more urgent, since it has been losing retail outlets and distribution points through the desire of other companies to push their own products.

"For this reason," the court held, "it is clear that there are business reasons for this merger which are entirely sufficient and are wholly unconnected with any desire to create a monopoly."

Interests Wall Street.

New York, Feb. 7.—(AP)—The judicial approval of the merger of the Standard Oil Company of New York and the Vacuum Oil company in St. Louis today is of particular interest to Wall street in the bearing it may have upon future consolidations of units of the original Standard Oil company.

This is the first time units of the original Standard Oil trust have sought to consolidate, in a measure undoing the work of partitioning the oil company into thirty-three new concerns in 1911 and 1912 as the result of proceedings under the Sherman anti-trust law.

Wall street understands that the keen competition which has developed in the oil industry in the last few years, together with numerous mergers among so-called independents, has led various standard units to consider reunion. Merger of the Standard Oil of California with the Standard Oil of New Jersey has been mentioned as a logical development, since Standard Oil of New Jersey, with its extensive marketing system and refining capacity, might eventually use to advantage the huge crude oil reserves of Standard Oil of California, which is already the largest crude producer in the United States.

The original project of combining these companies was announced a year ago, lacking only a fortnight. On the basis of the latest balance sheets, the combination will create an oil company second only to Standard of New Jersey among American concerns. The Royal Dutch Shell group is still the world's largest petroleum organization. The consolidated company will have a total book value of about $1,600,000, of which approximately one-quarter will be contributed by Vacuum.

Cites Lack of Adjustment in Price Levels

BY SCRUTATOR.

Lack of adjustment in price levels of various products is responsible for many of the world's troubles. To be more specific, the fall in prices has been quite uneven over a course of years, and remains so until this day.

The foreign trade of Great Britain, larger in proportion to domestic trade than that of any other country, has been affected by this phenomenon. On the record it appears that the British have for too long a time kept the prices high when they are selling and have kept them low when they are buying, with consequent damage to their business life.

According to Henry Clay, eminent English economist, his country is paying, or was in the immediate past, 18 per cent more for imports than it paid before the war, while the average price it receives for its exports is 51.3 per cent above pre-war. Part of the difference may be due to higher quality of exports, but Mr. Clay adds, "In the main it means that we are expecting to get more for what we supply the rest of the world while paying less for what we take from the rest of the world."

Exports Down One-fourth.

Exports from Great Britain are less by a fourth than they were before the war, and the unemployment insurance provisions are being invoked by a larger number of men and women than in 1921.

As a matter of armchair economics, it might seem to be the task of business leaders and financiers to see that adjustment is made. Leaving aside the usual lot of ideas to the effect that such matters can be cured by tinkering with gold or credit supplies, it would appear almost certain that Great Britain will have to get its export prices down to some extent if it expects to find markets in the nations which are sending abroad raw materials at extremely low prices.

It may be argued that this can only be done by penalizing labor with lower wages. Germany has definitely accepted this proposition, and experiments in a considerable number of trades are being made, with general percentage cuts in the rates of pay of all workers. That, of course, is one way to attack the problem; probably it is the wrong one.

High Wage Theory.

British industry has never been sold on the high wage theory. From the beginnings of industrialism it was always its belief that the best way to make money was to pay as little for production as possible and to sell to outsiders, the workers themselves not being expected to be able to purchase much. Competent authorities have often pointed out that even the British worker has never quite understood that the high wage theory is really a high production theory.

Consciously or unconsciously, the American has accepted the truth, that he can get his share only of what he produces. That share is not taken from static property or wealth already frozen in dollars, but from what is turned out month by month for sale. Accordingly, American workers from colonial days on have been higher paid than their British brethren. They have done more work. Part of that fact has been due to the insistence of their capitalists that mechanical tools to aid them should be the best obtainable.

It is not inconceivable, as some of our leading bankers have advocated, that wage scales in the United States must come down. That will be true if we are to accept the fact that gold is to grow still more valuable in relation to other commodities. It is difficult to see how the present low scales abroad can be cut down.

Where Danger Exists.

The world over it is getting to be more true than ever that the low cost producer and distributor is the one who survives. Danger exists when an attempt is made to get low costs by paying men wages that will not permit them to buy a greater measure of comfort than they now have.

A better way is to increase efficiency so that the same amount of wages turns out more dollars worth of goods.

The perils of unemployment, caused by the displacement of men with machines, are not so great for the workman as an attempt to keep him using antiquated machine methods, on the theory that these keep more men employed. Unemployment is more acute where that theory is credited than where it is not.

Armour & Co. Notes Better Demand for Meat Lines

Armour & Co. in its review of general packing house trade conditions says:

"Evidences of a somewhat broader demand for some leading meat lines were apparent this week, though prices for the most part were not greatly affected. Relatively low prices of other meats still curtailed the demand for beef.

"Both lamb and fresh pork displayed signs of some improvement in demand toward the close of the week, pork moving a little more freely and lamb showing a firmer undertone after having worked lower at the start. Smoked meats continued to do fairly well, while veal was a little slow at generally steady prices. Foreign business continued rather slow."

WHEAT PRICES RISE IN SPITE OF RAIN RELIEF

New Crop Deliveries Exhibit Strength.

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Traders are admittedly puzzled over the action of the grain markets. The anticipated rain and snow fell over the winter wheat belt, and, while not heavy, will provide much needed surface moisture in some sections.

In spite of this moisture relief, ordinarily construed as bearish, there was no pressure on wheat futures a good part of yesterday, and while Bennett and Lewis were sellers of the July, the close was at net gains of ⅝@1⅝c, with the September showing the most strength, finishing at 67c, while July was 67⅝@67½c. Old crop months were ¼c lower, with March 79¼c, and May 82@82¼c.

There was some selling of wheat futures during the day regarded as closing spreads with corn and the reverse, but there seemed to be buying orders on all the dips and losses were quickly recovered. The independent strength shown in Winnipeg attracted considerable attention, as the July in the latter market went to around 2c over Kansas City July, and the close was at net gains of 1½@1¾c in the face of reports of a rather slow foreign demand.

Winnipeg Works Higher.

Winnipeg has been gradually working closer to American markets, and messages from there during the day claimed that the May delivery seemed to be definitely established above the 60c level, and at the top showed over 13c above the inside figure of the season.

While fluctuations in the wheat market the last week were very erratic, the undertone was firm and the July finished 1⅝c higher as compared with the previous week, with old crop months ⅜c lower to ⅛c higher, the latter on May. Corn gained 2¼@3¼c; oats, 1¾@1⅞c, and rye, 1¼@1½c for the week, while lard was 15@20c lower and bellies off 50@55c.

Effect of the excessive rains in Australia during the period when the new wheat crop was being harvested was regarded as reflected in a decided reduction in the average weight of this season's grain. According to Broomhall the natural weight in New South Wales this year is 59½ lbs per bu, against 61⅝ lbs last season, while in Victoria it is 58½ lbs, against 62 lbs the previous year. The report had some effect on the Liverpool market, which ignored the sharp break in North America late Friday and closed ⅛@⅝d higher. Buenos Aires closed ⅝@⅞ higher for the day, with March quoted at 47⅝c.

Corn Market Strong.

Bear news seems to have gone stale as far as the corn market is concerned, and while there is rather persistent local selling on the bulges, the offerings of breaks are readily absorbed. At no time yesterday were prices more than a fraction below the finish of Friday, and the close was at net gains of 1⅛@1¼ with March, 64⅝@65c; May, 66½@66⅝c; July, 66¾@67⅝c, and September, 67½@67⅝c.

It is claimed that outside terminal markets are making every effort to dispose of their stock of winter shelled cash grain, which accounts for the continued purchases being reported made for shipment to Chicago. Local handlers booked 25,000 bu from terminals during the day in addition to 15,000 bu from the country. The rain and snow over the belt is expected to improve pasturage. No improvement was shown in the eastern shipping demand. Buenos Aires closed ⅝c higher for the day, although weather conditions in Argentina were favorable for conditioning the new crop, which is expected to set a new record.

Light Trade in Oats.

Commission houses were fair buyers of oats, while cash interests were sellers, but the aggregate trade was light and the market influenced largely by the action of corn. Closing trades were unchanged to ¾c higher with March, 33⅜c; May, 33¾c, and July, 33½c, the latter showing the most strength.

Rye price held within a range of ½c for the day with trade light and mainly of a local character. The close was ⅝@⅞c higher, March being 38½c; May, 40¼c, and July, 40⅝c.

Weekly Debits Increase, Reserve Bank Reports

Compared with the corresponding week of last year ($1,499,967,000), a decrease of 18.8 per cent was shown.

PLACE ORDERS FOR 2½ MILLIONS OF CITY'S GOODS

Orders for an estimated $2,500,000 worth of dry goods, millinery, women's ready to wear, giftware and variety goods were placed with local wholesale firms during Chicago's spring market week, which ended yesterday, according to a survey by the Chicago National Market Magazine, published by the Chicago Association of Commerce in the interests of the city's wholesale merchandise firms.

This volume of buying during one week's time was done by more than 5,000 buyers representing large and small stores in all sections of the nation and parts of Canada. Four style shows and dozens of giftware, millinery and variety goods exhibits were held during the week.

At the nineteenth semi-annual gathering of the interstate merchants' council of the Chicago Association of Commerce, more than 1,800 buyers were registered. Other buyers, while unorganized, entered the city's merchandise markets in numbers sufficient to raise the total well above 5,000.

J. C. PENNEY CO. SALES DECLINE 8.35% IN JAN.

January sales of the J. C. Penney company totaled $9,724,562, a decrease of 8.35 per cent from $10,610,055 reported for the like month of 1930.

Earl C. Sams, president, said that dollar sales being only slightly less than the same month of 1930, which showed unusually heavy gains over the preceding year, indicated a marked increase in unit sales and a return to normal retail buying. He added that a study of present retail prices, compared to those of January last year, showed a reduction of approximately 21 per cent.

The National Tea company reports consolidated sales for January, 1931, of $6,788,235, as compared with $7,333,919 for the corresponding month of last year.

Wheat Trading Declines; Corn Makes Good Gains

Speculative sales of wheat futures in Chicago and all leading exchanges in January aggregated 346,827,000 bu compared with 1,334,299,000 bu in the same time in 1930. This was the lightest business in a considerable period, due to the farm board being in control and to other conditions. In Chicago sales were 288,971,000 bu as compared with 1,151,591,000 bu in January last year.

Corn sales in Chicago last month were 542,019,000 bu, compared with 175,802,000 bu last year. In all markets corn sales were 600,101,000 bu, compared with 195,621,000 bu in 1930. This increase, 404,480,000 bu, was due to the short crop and the fact that corn is an open market and more attractive than wheat.

Oat sales in Chicago for the month of 30,883,000 bu compared with 34,662,000 bu a year ago, while in all markets the aggregate was 36,768,000 bu against 39,769,000 bu last year.

Pacific Telephone Shows $17,652,356 Net Income

Pacific Telephone and Telegraph company and subsidiaries yesterday reported for 1930 net income of $17,652,356, equal to $7.05 a share on 1,805,000 common shares outstanding at the end of the year, against $15,623,616, or $11.51 a share on 930,000 common shares outstanding at the end of 1929.

Coca Cola Co. Income Rises to New Peak

BY O. A. MATHER.

R. W. WOODRUFF.

Forty-four years ago a Georgia druggist took time out from mixing pills and powders and mixed up a new soft drink. He was Asa G. Candler, and he labeled the new drink Coca-Cola. The first year he dispensed twenty-five gallons of the basic sirup for the drink. From that modest start in an Atlanta drug store has grown the $61,000,000 Coca-Cola company, which last year sold 27,798,730 gallons of sirup for $41,284,510 in the United States and twenty-seven foreign countries.

The annual report of the Coca-Cola company, made public last night, shows that 1930 marked the eighth consecutive year in which the sales volume has shown an increase over the previous year and the sixth consecutive year in which all records have been broken. Its 1929 sales were 26,981,874 gallons for $39,260,814. So 1930 was anything but a year of depression for Coca Cola.

Net Is $13,515,535.

Net profit for 1930 was $13,515,535, equivalent after dividends of the class A stock to $11.15 a share of 1,000,000 common shares. Last February the company increased its annual common stock rate from $4 to $6, and after paying the higher dividend it still added $5,151,433 to its surplus, which now stands at $20,797,641. Net profit for 1929 was $12,758,276, equivalent to $10.25 a share of the common stock.

These facts and figures have to be gleaned from digging into the cold figures of the report. As to the year's accomplishments and the prospects for this year, President R. W. Woodruff modestly says:

"I am pleased to report that during 1930 total sales as well as net profits have exceeded all previous records. A conservative policy of expansion has been continued, reserves have been increased and the financial position of the company is stronger than at any time in its history. We look forward to 1931 with confidence."

Will Expand Sales Campaign.

The report shows that Coca-Cola has pursued its policy of buying in its senior stock. It now holds about 220,000 shares of the 1,000,000 class A shares. These holdings have been acquired at an average cost of about $56 a share, or a total of $11,141,304. The balance sheet as of Dec. 31, 1930, shows an unusually strong financial position with current assets of $18,746,872 and current liabilities of only $987,557, or a ratio of 19 to 1.

Coca Cola acquired additional subsidiary companies last year and the profits of these subsidiaries last year accounted for 14 per cent of the parent company's net earnings, whereas back in 1926 the subsidiaries operated at a loss. The Coca Cola's interest in these subsidiaries is largely represented in an item of $23,116,807 among its assets classed as "formulae, trade mark and good will."

The record figures for Coca Cola last year followed an intensive advertising and sales promotion program planned in 1929. This campaign will be expanded further this year.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, N. Y., Feb. 7.—The ayes had it by a good majority in today's dealings on the stock exchange. United States Steel advanced an even point, American Can 1⅝, Eastman Kodak 2¾, New York Central 2⅛, Westinghouse 1⅜, General Electric 1¾, Johns Manville 1⅝, and Consolidated Gas 1⅜. Gains of even larger proportions were registered among some of the lesser lights of the list.

Nothing of a particularly inspiring nature developed in the news to support speculation for the rise, but apparently the trading fraternity, in the continued absence of any visible sign of widespread improvement in the business situation, is out to nourish a growing faith in "things unseen."

Take Cheerful Views.

Brokers' letters are becoming more and more inclined to take a cheerful view of the situation and the manner in which the market snaps back after every little bear foray and the doggedness with which it pushed ahead on its "creeping advance" is said to be winning recruits to the bull side daily. There are those who look for considerable improvement now before any serious reaction develops. Failure of the long predicted setback to develop this week or the week before this has done much to put pessimism out of fashion.

Washington reports continue to indicate a growing desire on the part of leaders of both political groups to avoid an extra session of congress—lately the big bogey of the street.

The weekly trade journals reported further irregularity showing in most directions and ascribed this uneasiness in a measure to the limited purchasing power of the public but so far as the results showed nobody gave them a tumble.

A wholesome feature of the day's trading was the complete absence of selling pressure anywhere. Coupled with this was a further tendency to favor commitments for the advance in selected stocks representing companies whose position is seemingly well liquidated.

Motor Shares Active.

Motor shares were conspicuously active and strong—more so than they have been since the opening stages of the annual automobile show here. Auburn assumed the leadership of the group piling nearly six points more on top of the sensational gains it has been amassing since the pool, said to be guiding its destinies, began to tighten the screws on the shorts a

Receipts at Chicago for today are estimated at 16,000 cattle; 70,000 hogs and 17,000 sheep.

All classes of live stock sold at lower prices last week. Fat lambs led in the decline, closing the week mostly 75c lower. Cattle were next in the downturn, closing 25@50c lower. Hogs showed the least decline, Saturday's average price being 25c below the previous Saturday's average. At midweek hog values were at new low levels since the summer of 1925, the average price that day being 15c below the closing average.

In the cattle market unevenness prevailed throughout the week. Sharp declines on the initial session resulted in smaller receipts later, when part of the early decline was recovered. Better grades suitable for eastern shipment naturally were strongest in the recovery. Some of the best grades were close to last week's closing prices, but the bulk of offerings shared in the 25@50c declines for the week. Prices, however, were mostly 25@50c higher than the low time early last week.

Extreme top for the week was $11.75 for yearlings and $11.40 for heavy steers. The week's average price was $8.70, the lowest since 1924, being 5c below the lowest weekly average last summer.

Hogs Decline 15 Cents.

Hog prices eased off Saturday, the general market being around 15c lower than Friday's selling. Top for hogs was $7.90, compared with $8.10 Friday and $8.10 a week ago. The average price was $7.25, compared with $7.80 a week ago.

Receipts were smaller during the week, a reduction of 12,000 head being noted as compared with the previous week's total. Declines in face of smaller receipts reflected the limited demand for the dressed product and byproducts of the slaughtering industry.

Last week's supply was 201,500 head at Chicago, compared with 213,498 head the previous week. A year ago the supply was 208,022 and two years ago 240,581 hogs were on sale.

Lambs Scarce and Firm.

Only 7,000 sheep and lambs were on sale Saturday and approximately 3,000 head were shipped direct to packers from other points. The market was firm on the few lambs offered but nothing was sold above $8.75. Top the previous day was $8.85, and that price was still quotable for choice lambs.

During the week, fat lamb values dropped rather sharply in face of light supplies. Deterioration in quality as well as a sluggish dressed trade were blamed for the soft market on live lambs. Closing prices were 50@75c lower, and mostly 75c lower than best selling last week.

Receipts of sheep and lambs during the week totaled 67,100 head compared with 76,631 head the previous week. A year ago the corresponding supply was 82,701.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 16,000 cattle, 70,000 hogs and 17,000 sheep, against 19,327 cattle, 74,410 hogs and 20,564 sheep a week ago and 13,057 cattle, 76,183 hogs and 2,426 sheep the corresponding day a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 35,000 cattle, 230,000 hogs, and 78,000 sheep against 36,639 cattle, 209,063 hogs and 84,214 sheep a year ago, and 41,602 cattle, 243,845 hogs and 68,537 sheep two years ago.

QUIET DAY IN LARD

Trading in lard was light yesterday, with a lack of pressure until almost the close, when offerings increased and created a little weakness. The close, however, was 2¼@10c higher, the latter on February. Liverpool lard was unchanged to 3d lower. Export clearances 186,100 lbs. Hog prices were lower, with large receipts expected the coming week. Cash trade was moderate. Prices follow:

MONEY FLOWS TO LONDON FOR STERLING BILLS

Cable Transfer Rate Rises to Nearly 4.86.

BY SIDNEY CAVE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Feb. 7.—A considerable amount of American money has flowed into London this week. A rather heavy purchase of sterling bills has been concluded for American interests and the development brings its marked effect on the sterling dollar exchange. Other buying of sterling bills shows a marked increase in ordinary normal business. European central banks begin particularly prominent.

The chief reason for activity is the attraction of higher level of discount rates in London following the recent policy of the Bank of England in tightening its control over an outside market. The result was very decided in upward movements in all principal foreign exchanges, especially improving the sterling in terms of United States dollars and the French franc.

The cable transfer rate on New York moved up from 4.85⅝ to nearly 4.86 while the French rate which dipped one time to 123.88½ has recovered to 123.91¼ which is above a point where gold can be taken profitably from the Bank of England.

German Rate Is Exception.

Nearly all other continental exchanges advanced favoring London but the German rate was an exception owing to the success of Germany securing fresh credit abroad. The market apparently has become reconciled to a period of relatively high rates.

In enforcing its control of the situation the Bank of England has not confirmed its operations to the sale of bills to the market, it was clearly indicated in the last bank return. It is believed that other steps were taken to restrict the supply of available credit, one explanation being that the Bank of England has been borrowing from clearing banks. This was not confirmed, but evidently unusual steps had been taken for the purpose of keeping the market discount rate at within about a half per cent of official minimum.

American interests also participated in last week's British treasury bills wherein a sizeable part of the issue was placed with American houses at only a few pence under 2 7-16 per cent, which is, with one exception, the highest rate since July 25 last year.

Stock Marts Quiet.

Stock exchange markets are generally a little indecisive with little or no public interest in this week's dwindling business which proves that periods of improved sentiment have short life.

With the cessation of professional activity the market is again facing unpleasant factors such as a renewed fall in certain commodity prices, political and financial disturbances overseas, budget uncertainties, unemployment problems, and adverse industrial company reports.

An easier tendency has been developed on the gilt edged market where quite a fair amount of selling is noticeable in British government stocks on rumors concerning government finances. The week-end appearance of a new Indian government loan for seventeen million sterling, approximately $82,620,000, had a dampening effect on the market especially as other new issues were known to be under consideration.

Although indications point to there being plenty of money for first class issues, many recent intended issues have been postponed owing to a general lack of confidence.

ARGENTINE GOV'T PLANS TO ENTER GRAIN BUSINESS

[Copyright: 1931: By the New York Times.]

BUENOS AIRES, Feb. 7.—The provisional government is going into the grain business in an effort to "free Argentine farmers of the impositions of foreign cereal export firms" which have monopoly of the export business from Argentina. The minister of foreign affairs has instructed the Argentine diplomatic representatives in Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Holland and Belgium to visit millers and try to sell them Argentine wheat, to be shipped direct to them by the Argentine government without the intervention of middlemen.

The government beleives that the present unsatisfactory situation in the wheat market here is due to the determination of foreign exporters not to export until they have forced prices below the already unprofitable levels. It also believes that the depressed exchange value of Argentine currency and cheap ocean freights will make it possible for diplomats to get wheat orders is they seek them energetically as they have been instructed to do.

The grain export companies require the Argentine farmers to pack their wheat in new burlap bags which the grain exporters sell to the farmers on credit but with a written contract that they will not sell their wheat to any one else. They then take over the crop under a purchase contract which specifies "price to be fixed."

MOTOR SHARES LEAD CHICAGO STOCK ADVANCE

Lincoln Printing Reports $629,371 Net Income.

BY THOMAS FURLONG.

A brief period of feverish activity preceded the close of the short trading session on the Chicago exchange yesterday. Evidence of strength in the leading New York stocks flashing on the moving tape was the signal for whisking up prices of the trading favorites here.

Gains recorded for the day in the majority of leading shares amounted to a point or so while in some cases not exceeding a point. With General Motors crossing 49 on the big board the leading motor shares here, including Borg Warner, Allied Products, and Houdaille B, pushed ahead for gains of a point or more. Lesser gains were made by Bendix and Cord corporation.

Other Strong Spots.

Other notable strong spots in the list were Insull Utility, up 1¾; Waukesha Motors, up 3, and United States Radio, which added another point to its recent gains. The latter continued to reflect the benefits of strong pool support.

Strength in Lincoln Printing shares developed with the issuance of the company's annual report showing gains in gross and net earnings over 1929.

The statement showed gross earnings for the fiscal year, ended Dec. 31, of $1,168,559 and net income of $629,371. This compared with gross of $961,173 and net of $580,820 in 1929. The 1930 net earnings were equivalent, after preferred dividends, to $3.03 a share on common stock outstanding, against $2.69 a share on the same number of shares outstanding in the previous year.

The consolidated balance sheet of the company and subsidiaries at the close of the year disclosed quick assets of $1,971,794 and current liabilities of $389,152. These figures compared with $1,739,869 and $178,954 respectively at the close of 1929.

Retires Preference Shares.

During the year the company retired 8,358 shares of the $3.50 preference stock through purchase in the open market. It also purchased 4,418 shares of common stock which is held in the treasury for resale.

The gradual improvement made in prices on the exchange last week is shown in the compilation on market values of fifty representative shares traded in. The analysis, made by Otis & Co., yesterday disclosed a value of $2,382,024,026 as compared with $2,333,432,094 at the close of the preceding week. This was an increase during the week of $48,591,932 or 2.08 per cent.

SUBURBS GAIN IN BUILDING FOR JANUARY

Increase Over December and January, 1930.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

Suburban construction figures for January, made public last night by the building survey department of A. W. Straus & Co. sounded the most cheerful note heard in Chicagoland for many moons. When figures for last month are compared with January of 1930 the gain comes to 132 per cent. Comparing January of this year with the preceding month, December, 1930, the gain is not so spectacular, but still is cheering; it amounts to 35 per cent.

Prospective building construction in forty-four Chicago suburbs totaled $3,085,726 in the month of January, as compared with $1,082,105 with the same month of 1930. It's true that when analyzed this gain of 182 per cent is not quite so significant as it sounds, for the big impetus to this advance was given by the Calumet steel district cities. Hammond, Ind., for instance, contributed $2,347,185 to the total, or more than two-thirds of the volume for the entire suburban area.

In the January-December comparison the combined figures for January was $3,069,976 and December was $1,972,964, which gives a 55 per cent gain. In this comparison the Indiana steel city of Hammond also played the star rôle with a gain of 6,230 per cent.

Libertyville Is Second.

Nineteen of the forty suburbs in the foregoing comparison made individual gains in a January-December comparison. Libertyville followed Hammond, with 9,900 per cent increase. The reason for the big Hammond jump in figures was a permit granted for the erection of a second unit of the State Line generating plant, active construction of which will go forward about the first of June.

Other towns reporting gains in January over December were: Glen Ellyn, 2,218%; Geneva, 1,650%; Cicero, 663%; Maywood, 466%; East Chicago, 429%; St. Charles, 354%; Homewood, 179%; Glencoe, 275%; Park Ridge, 176%; Elmhurst, 105%; Wheaton, 53%. Others registering gains were: Calumet City, Downers Grove, Waukegan, Blue Island, Chicago Heights, and Gary.

In the January-January comparison, as already stated Hammond topped the list. Sixteen other towns reported gain. East Chicago, Ind., has an increase of 4,027%; Maywood, 1,317%. St. Charles, 900%; Homewood, 317%; Wilmette, 315%; Wheaton, 266%; Harvey, 220%; Cicero, 183%; Gary, 121%. Other towns registering increases were: North Chicago, Hinsdale, Blue Island, Aurora, Waukegan, Lombard, and Glen Ellyn.

Place Porter and Mills on Sanitary District Group

Walter Mills, chairman of the industrial division of the Chicago Real Estate board, and Lester W. Porter, chairman of the same division last year, have been named by Mark Levy, president of the realtors, as the board's two representatives on the real estate development commission of the sanitary district of Chicago.

The commission is to make a study and survey of the land and property of the sanitary district adjacent to the main and Calumet channels and report to the board of trustees their recommendations for development.

The Illinois Manufacturers' association, the Chicago Association of Commerce and the Cook County Real Estate board have been asked to recommend two members each and railroads near the district territory also have been asked to name one representative each. These, together with the district trustees will constitute the commission.

The dining room will be paneled in knotty pine. There'll be five master bedrooms. The house will have five fireplaces, one of which will be in the basement recreation room.

Lester Armour Sells Home to E. D. Shumway

What is said to be the largest real estate deal on the north shore in many months was reported closed yesterday when Mr. and Mrs. Edward D. Shumway bought the Lester Armour property on Westminster avenue, in the heart of the east section of Lake Forest, for an undisclosed consideration. The land comprises between seven and eight acres, and is improved with a fourteen room stucco residence erected twelve years ago from plans by Putney & Jenkins. Mr. Shumway is vice president of the Quaker Oats company, and now lives on Green Bay road. John Griffith, Inc., of Lake Forest was the only broker in the transaction.

LESTER ARMOUR.

Mr. Armour is having plans drawn by David Adler for a magnificent residence to be erected on his seventy acre estate just south of Shore Acres Country club and north of Lake Bluff. It adjoins the estate of William McCormick Blair, and fronts 900 feet on the lake shore. The new Armour residence is scheduled for completion early in the spring of 1932. Mr. and Mrs. Shumway will take possession of the present Armour house next fall.

SURVEY SHOWS HOME SALES IN OAK PARK AREA

The George R. Hemingway organization of Oak Park has just completed a survey of the new section of north Oak Park between Ridgeland and Harlem avenues and between Division street and North avenue, which is a district in which homes range in value from $20,000 to $35,000.

"Two years ago there were a number of completed houses in this area and it was considered by many to be overbuilt," said Homer L. Bundy of the Hemingway organization. "Even though the last two years have been considered comparatively quiet so far as house selling is concerned, sales constantly have been made in this section, and even with considerable building which has been continued for the last two years, the following figures show what a large percentage of the available homes have been absorbed:

"On Jan. 1, 1928, there were eighty-seven houses in this section which were for sale and unoccupied. On Jan. 1, 1929, this was reduced to fifty-six. On Jan. 1, 1930, it was reduced to thirty-five, and on Jan. 1 1931, it was reduced to fourteen, with five new houses being started but not completed."

RALPH TIFFANY BUYS RESIDENCE SITE IN SUBURB

Among a list of cash sales R. W. Bramberg & Co. report having sold 100 feet of vacant on the west side of Franklin avenue, 100 feet south of Thomas street, in River Forest, to Ralph G. Tiffany, who is having plans drawn by Arthur B. Malwurm for a residence.

The same firm reports selling fifty feet of vacant at 1225 North Woodbine avenue, in Oak Park, to Percy C. Peterson for a cash consideration, and has started work on a colonial residence for Mr. Peterson, to be completed May 1.

Mr. Bramberg states that his firm also has started work on an English style home at 1082 Oak Ridge drive, in Glencoe, for W. A. Taylor, who recently purchased the site from Baird & Warner for a cash consideration.

William Mitchell to Build Farm Group on His Estate

N. MAX DUNNING TELLS HOW TO CHOOSE A HOME

Lists Many Things to Guard Against.

This is the eleventh of a series of articles sponsored by the committee on public information of the Chicago chapter of the American Institute of Architects, of which Eugene H. Klaber is chairman.

BY N. M. DUNNING, F. A. I. A.

The purchase of a house is in many, if not most cases, the most important financial venture of a family up to that time. It is therefore a matter of the greatest importance that the purchase shall be wisely made in order that the budget that has been carefully planned to meet interest and principal payments on the purchase price shall not be dissipated in unforeseen costs of maintenance, repairs and operation due to the use of poor materials, equipment and construction.

N. MAX DUNNING.

This article, because of its necessary brevity, will only attempt to deal with the purchase of a house already built and where its construction cannot have been observed by the purchaser. At best I can only call attention to a few of the more obvious "danger signals" and advise that where these signals exist the house should only be purchased after a thorough examination and favorable report by some disinterested architect or builder.

In a house, so much that is vital to its comfort, durability, maintenance cost and resale value is concealed and so little revealed, this precaution should always be taken.

Keep These in Mind.

Two very important general facts should be kept in mind. First, that one of the best safeguards protecting the interests of the purchaser is to deal only with concerns of proven experience and integrity, whose business reputation will continue behind the house they sell. Second, slovenly workmanship—bad joints and a general air of carelessness in the parts that can be seen is a sure sign of worse conditions in the parts that are concealed.

We will assume that the prospective purchaser is attracted to the neighborhood and likes the general appearance of the house and that he has followed the suggestions so admirably set forth in previous articles in carefully investigating taxes, special assessments, zoning, accessibility of schools, churches, transportation, etc., and that his interest now lies in examining critically the house itself.

Notice Walks and Driveways.

He will first notice the curbs, walks and driveways. Are they level or have they been heaved or cracked by frost? If there is a fence, is it in perfect alignment, is it well painted, is it substantially built? Does the ground slope away in all directions from the building so that water will not enter through the basement windows, or filter down the basement walls? Are the trees and shrubs, if any, attractively placed and in healthy condition, and is the lawn in good shape?

If the house is of frame construction he will notice whether the joints are tight fitting, particularly around doors, windows, and angles. Examine the paint—if it is blistered or chalky or bare in spots it is of poor quality and repainting will be an early expense. Notice whether nail holes are carefully puttied.

If the house is stucco, look for cracks. If they are quite evident and run in diagonal lines it is a pretty sure sign of settlement or bad construction. Very fine hair cracks are not so serious, but they will ultimately let water in behind the stucco and the stucco will come off.

Try the Mortar Joints.

If the house is of brick, try the mortar joints with a knife. If they are soft and can be scraped out it is poor mortar and the wall will be damp and sometimes disintegrate. See particularly that joints around doors and window frames and sills are completely filled. Notice whether the metal work is well painted.

The roofing material is of very great importance. Tile, slate, and asbestos singles have much greater durability but cost more than wood or asphalt shingles. Notice whether the roof lines are straight and true, or whether they are sagged.

On entering the house study carefully first the general arrangement and the relationship of room to room with an idea to privacy where that is desired, convenience and economy of steps in the daily routine of housework.

Then consider each room separately with regard to its size, its exposure to sunlight and the wall spaces it affords for the placing of furniture, rugs, pictures, etc. Try and compare in your mind the room you are studying with other rooms you have lived in or have seen. Will it take nicely the furniture you now possess or hope to acquire?

Notice Radiator Location.

Notice the location of radiators, lighting fixtures, base plugs, etc. Are the base plugs so located and in sufficient number that you can use the lamps you need and also have your radio, refrigerator, washing machine and other electrical labor saving devices?

Examine carefully the kitchen and the quality, adequacy and location of its fixtures and equipment with particular reference to the convenience of the arrangement in saving steps in household duties.

In the bathroom examine the plumbing fixtures carefully and try them all to see whether they fill quickly and discharge quickly and noiselessly. Notice further whether the medicine cabinet, soap dishes, glass holders, towel rods, etc., are adequate and firmly secured in place.

In going through a house it is assumed you will observe whether there is a coat closet, and will notice the sizes of other closets and whether they are equipped with poles, hooks, etc. You will note whether the house is provided with metal weather strips, whether the doors and windows are screened, and whether bells and a mail box are provided.

I am going to call a little attention now to construction. If the floors spring and squeak, the joists are too light and there has been shrinkage. If they are sagged and in walking over them there are bumps and depressions, it is a worse sign. If the stairs creak and sprin it is careless construction.

If there are cracks in the plaster over doors and windows and in the angles of the walls it is a sign of bad and probably too light framing. Cracks in the ceiling indicate sagging joists, bad lath or too thin plaster, or all of these things.

Careless fitting of joints in the base, casings and interior finish is apt to be an indication of bad workmanship elsewhere. Open joints between the baseboard and the floor shows shrinkage which is apt to grow worse. Open joints in the interior woodwork shows that the finish was placed before the plaster was dry, or that it was unseasoned lumber.

Plaster Stains Are Warning.

Plaster stains under the roof indicate leaks and should be carefully investigated. Discoloration where the basement floor joins the outside walls indicates leaks and probably a damp basement. Cracks in the outside walls or basement floors are signs of settlement and imperfect foundation, or bad concrete. Concrete work should be hard, smooth, and even and floors should slope to drain outlets.

Having investigated the planning and construction of the house as carefully as I hope you will have done, and having found that it avoids most of the serious defects I have attempted to call attention to, you will be safe in signing on the "dotted line" and I believe will live "happily ever after."

HOME BUILDING AND REMODELING

HOUSE MUST BE RIGHT SIZE TO BE SATISFACTORY

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

It may be the man who pays when a home is built, but it is the woman who is usually commander in chief behind the forces on the field when the actual construction is going on. A house to be satisfactory must meet certain basic requirements and one of these is that it should be the right size. Not only the right size from the standpoint of family purse but also of family size. No house which is too small for domestic needs or too large to be maintained without undue straining of income or strength is really ever satisfactory.

LOUISE BARGELT.

Very frequently it is the woman who decides just how large it is to be and on just this matter of size women have been accused of being poor judges.

One hears it said that women won't look ahead, the future being suggestive of age—a state which the world's feminine contingent supposedly holds in fear. Personally it seems that this latter accusation is hardly true in that many of us spend far more time than we should "living in the future," dreaming of what it holds, hoping for the things it will bring. And while it may be true that both the man and the woman when building a house do not always give enough thought to future needs, the reason for this is because they are too absorbed in the many problems of the present time alone.

Many Changes Occur.

Of course many changes occur quite beyond human ability to foresee, but again many changes in family size and even family purse are more than half expected. When the couple is young there is the possibility of children, or of older relatives coming into the home, or of likely income expansion; where a couple is middle aged it may only be a few years before the children are grown and away, and the "big" house, built to accommodate so generously the nearly grown family becomes a lonesome place and a burden to maintain.

Since a house is not satisfactory if it is either too large or too small, it is a measure of precaution to put down on paper the present family size, income, and number of rooms needed. Then another list made of possible rooms needed in five years can also be made. In this way one can perhaps judge a little more accurately, the size of the house destined to give the most satisfaction in the immediate years to come.

Fashioned in the English cottage character with adaptation of Norman tower, this home shown is designed for a city or a suburban residence on a lot of fifty or more feet in width. The architect is A. C. W. Buckett, 2024 Chestnut avenue, Wilmette.

Suggestions for the exterior are face brick slightly rough in texture, in dark ruddy blend with intermixture of tan, using gray buff mortar, or overburnt common brick.

The tower and trim of lannon stone, rock faced intermixed with half seam faced for fine color effect. The chimney pots are of dull red terra cotta, the exterior woodwork stained a dark brown, the roof of black slate, blended to green at the top.

Steel sash, with inside special screens, is painted outside to match the woodwork. Gutters, downspouts, and so on are of copper and the front windows of plate glass.

In the interior, wood trim is eliminated to a great extent, the windows having rounded plaster jambs and the doors having only small finish moulding at the plaster line. Plaster coves at ceiling in principal rooms create soft restful effects, and many possibilities in decorative blending.

Fireplace of Small Stones.

The natural fireplace may be of small selected stones laid up in attractive arch design, and a few small windows of vari colored leaded glass, in tiny diamond panes, add sparkle to interior and exterior alike.

The masonry walls employ as backing a structural insulating tile with sheet insulation over this and furring strips for lathing; this consrtuction is an investment well repaid in fuel saving and interior comfort. Insulation at second floor ceiling is imperative.

The attached auto room is held to snug proportions to avoid the appearance of over emphasis. It will accommodate average two car demands.

As for costs, this home can be built of ordinary construction for approximately $12,500. With steel structure and incombustible materials for about $13,800. With concrete structure, tile partitions and so the cost also will be about $13,800. Using composition shingles in place of slate, galvanized iron in place of copper, and other substitute economies, the cost of construction might be reduced to a minimum of $11,000.

As prices today depend largely upon the individual demand for work, variation may be greater than normal and contractors very anxious for business to keep their crews at work, might be able to lower these figures.

A Circular Vestibule.

As for the interior plan, a circular vestibule, made possible by the central tower, leads directly into the reception hall which in turn leads into the oblong, abundantly lighted living room, 13x22.

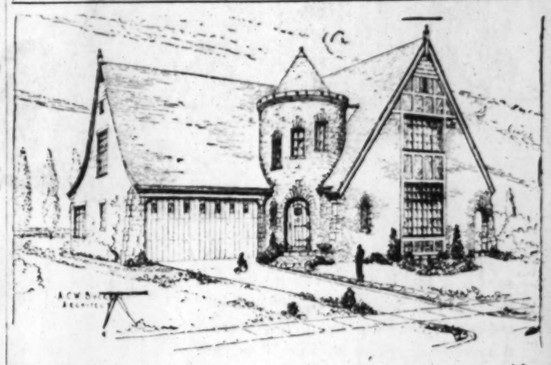
The dining room is nearly square, 13.6x15, and there is a small breakfast room, a pantry, a kitchen, 9x12, and an enclosed service porch, 4x8.

The entrance to the attached auto room is through the service porch. The above rooms, together with a lavatory and toilet opening off the circular vestibule at the front, complete the down stairs layout.

Stairs to the second floor from the reception hall disclose three bedrooms, two baths with tile floor and wainscot, a small circular sewing room directly over the vestibule, and a trunk room. Five closets besides the trunk room have been included in this second floor. In the basement there is ample space for a recreation room if desired.

This house has been built in all steel construction in the north part of Edgebrook, Ill.

ENGLISH COTTAGE TYPE



For the walls of this arresting English cottage type of home, with adaptation of Norman tower, the architect, A. C. W. Buckett, 2024 Chestnut avenue, suggests inexpensive face brick in dark ruddy blend with intermixture of tans. The tower trim may be of lannon stone, the roof of rich black slate blending to green at the top. According to the type of materials and construction employed, the cost of house in the Chicago area may run from $11,000 to $14,000.

FARM and GARDEN
BY PAUL POTTER

FARMERS TAKE TO MERGERS AS MARKETING AID

The trend toward consolidation and merging of enterprises, with resultant economies, is not peculiar to the industrial world these days. Farmers are availing themselves of this means of eliminating waste and gaining a firmer grip on modern competitive marketing.

And the producers who, in the middle west alone furnish a cash market for millions of bushels of grain and in their own right stand next to dairymen in total business volume in agriculture, supply outstanding examples of how it is being done.

There was a time when some 5,000 local live stock shipping associations existed, with as many as twelve or fourteen in a county. Illinois alone had 560 of them, and Iowa nearly a thousand. But, like the grain elevator and cross roads store, competition, improved transportation, and lack of volume have forced a turn in affairs.

"The local shipping associations, which flourished so vigorously between 1915 and 1925, are having a struggle for their existence now," declares Ray E. Miller, marketing specialist of the Illinois Agricultural association. "In a survey made during recent months in Illinois, I found an enormous mortality — half of them are gone for good."

Iowa, where 60 per cent of the annual hog sales are now made direct from farmer to packer, has seen the greatest transformation. Nebraska, Indiana, and Ohio follow Illinois closely in total volume of beef, pork, and mutton sales.

These small shipping associations, competing with private stock buyers, serve as assembling units. Next farmer owned sales agencies were established in the central stockyards at Chicago, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, St. Paul, Kansas City, Omaha, Indianapolis, and other points. Between the inroads of these agencies and the rapidly growing direct sales, private commission firms are showing steady reduction in volume of live stock handled, records disclose.

The death knell of the myriad small associations, which might be likened to the over abundance of country banks, was due to these reasons, as Mr. Miller points out: Infrequent and irregular shipments, failure to provide service from farm, higher percentage of mixed shipments, expensive operation on low volume, higher percentage of losses from cripples, deads, etc., because of mixed shipments, poor freight service and failure of railroads to keep pace with new types of competition.

Five country-wide farmers' associations now are established in Illinois. Others will follow, as will a state-wide agency to become a part of the federal farm board's plan for a single, nation-wide sales system.

The agencies in Shelby, Macon, Champaign, Vermillion, and Iroquois counties have all been formed in the last year or two, replacing an average of twelve local associations each.

Two avenues of escape were open to the small, inefficient units—either to consolidate as these have done, or to increase volume and efficiency. Lack of volume has been the greatest death dealing factor up to date.

The larger units of assembly and sales offer many advantages in cooperative marketing. They make possible home grading of stock, just as with eggs, fruit, or any other farm commodity, and shipping to the most favorable markets. Freight rates are lowered, animal losses lessened, and the cost of selling is reduced. Such associations usually start by shipping one day each week, then add shipping days with increasing volume of animals.

Trucks are finding their place in this system chiefly for assembling, since few long haul rates are comparable with railroads yet. Since trucks are quickest and cheapest on shorter hauls, there is little chance for shipping associations to survive within a 75 mile radius or so of a central market.

Means of financing the feeding and marketing of live stock are also being standardized in the modern schemes of doing business.

Cherish that captivating smile

. . . THAT SPIRIT OF YOUTH

If thousands of dentists were to advise you that one type of dentifrice was the most effective in protecting teeth and gums, wouldn't you try it?

YOUR RADIANT SMILE, that animation so attractive to all who know you . . . yours to have? Also yours to hold. And how surely that will depend upon the care your teeth and gums receive.

Perhaps you sometimes wonder if you really are giving them the best of care. You notice so many conflicting theories and different dentifrices. What is right?

In order that this important question might be answered by the highest authority, E. R. Squibb & Sons asked a great American research institution to conduct an investigation among 50,000 practicing dentists. Read the following summary of the replies received:

95% of the answers stated that germ acids most frequently cause tooth decay and gum irritation;

95% agreed that the most serious trouble occurs at the place where teeth and gums meet;

85% stated that the best product to prevent these acids from causing decay and irritating the gums is Milk of Magnesia.

Isn't this conclusive assurance that Squibb Dental Cream will protect your teeth and gums? For Squibb's is made with more than 50% Squibb Milk of Magnesia.

Squibb's cleans beautifully — and without the use of grit or astringent or anything which might possibly cause injury. Begin using it morning and night and watch your teeth grow more lustrous. Notice how refreshed and healthy your mouth feels . . . how your smile sparkles! E. R. Squibb & Sons, New York. Manufacturing Chemists to the Medical Profession since 1858.

WHAT ABOUT DIET? Modern dentistry recognizes that foods rich in vitamins and minerals are important to sound, healthy teeth. And incidentally they are wonderful for sparkling eyes and clear complexions. So resolve to eat each day some fresh fruit, at least one green vegetable and some form of milk. Squibb Cod-Liver Oil is an unusually dependable source of both Vitamins A and D. Available in both the mint-flavored form and plain, it is recommended by many physicians, especially for the diet of growing children.

WHAT ABOUT ACIDITY? Dentists stress the importance of a balanced diet because they know that a great deal of dental trouble is caused, not only by local germ acids present in the mouth, but also by an acid condition resulting from careless diet and the strain of modern life. It often affects teeth, vigor and health. If your physician or dentist suggests that you take an antacid, here are two superlative Squibb antacids. Squibb Milk of Magnesia is exceptionally palatable. Squibb Bicarbonate of Soda is pure, efficacious and free from bitterness.

Make Sure You Sleep Tonight

A Drugless Way to Get 8 Hours of Sound, Natural Sleep

HERE is a way you can be sure of getting a "good night's sleep" tonight. A way that is safe, sane and simple—that entirely avoids the use of drugs or sedatives.

It is a way that over 20,000 doctors advise. Because it gives you sound sleep! Natural sleep! Restful sleep that rebuilds and rejuvenates you in mind and body! When you wake up in the morning your entire system shows the results of the rest you've had.

Thousands of people all over the world have found Ovaltine will do this for them. Without forming the slightest habit, as with drugs. In 54 countries of the world Ovaltine is the recognized best "nightcap".

Developed some years ago by a Swiss scientist, Ovaltine is now produced under license in the United States according to the exact Swiss formula. It is a pure food-drink—you merely mix a few teaspoonfuls in warm milk and drink it just before you go to bed. Then go to sleep. And while you sleep, Ovaltine does several remarkable things for you.

Does Three Things

First, it induces sound, restful sleep by a natural process.

Second, it aids digestion, since it contains in high proportion a remarkable food property known as diastase, which is a natural food substance with the power to digest the starch content of other foods in your stomach. Ovaltine, because of its high proportion of diastase, will digest four to five times its own weight of other foods in your stomach, and thus lifts a great burden from your digestive organs.

Third, it rebuilds worn-out nerve cells. Because it contains in concentrated form a nerve restorative called "lecithin" which is taken from eggs. Lecithin rebuilds nerve tissues as you sleep.

During the World War, Ovaltine was used by the Red Cross as a standard ration for invalid, nerve-shattered soldiers.

Try It Tonight

Just try Ovaltine tonight. Note how quickly you go to sleep. See how differently you feel tomorrow. A few weeks' use of Ovaltine will make an amazing difference. Your whole appearance will show the result of this restful sleep and new vitality.

Take Ovaltine not only for sleeplessness, but whenever you feel nervous or run down.

Thousands of people, on doctors' advice, also take it as a stomach "conditioner". So whenever you begin to "feel" your stomach, just take 4 teaspoonfuls of Ovaltine in a half glass of warm milk with your meal. You will be surprised at the way it helps your stomach and rests your stomach.

For Ovaltine, when taken with a meal, will digest the major portion of all the starch content of other foods you have eaten. In this way Ovaltine not only relieves distress but actually helps the cause of the trouble.

Also this is one of the reasons why Ovaltine helps to put you to sleep at night, for digestive unrest is one of the main causes of sleeplessness.

Start tonight! Just 'phone your druggist or grocer for a tin of Ovaltine. Mix 2 to 4 teaspoonfuls in a glass of warm milk and drink just before you go to bed.

Whatever you think of the claims made for Ovaltine, just try it! It has brought restful sleep and teeming energy to thousands. You'll be surprised at what it does for you.

"Drunkenness Is a Disease and I Can Cure It"
—Leslie E. Keeley, M.D., LL.D.

THE EDITOR of a powerful Chicago Newspaper before his death challenged this statement of Dr. Keeley that "Drunkenness is a disease and I can cure it." He defied Dr. Keeley to cure the men whom he would send to the Institute. The results were so convincing that, through his great newspaper, he was personally responsible for thousands of men and women taking The Keeley Treatment for Liquor.

THE PRINCE OF THE MIMES COMES BACK TO THE SCREEN, funny feet, trick hat, emotional mustache and all. Reproduced here are scenes from his new picture, "City Lights." But the pathos of the love story is not permitted to submerge the comicality of the movies' funniest man; he is still Chaplinesque, unique.

CANDY SHIPPED ALL OVER THE WORLD—DELIVERY GUARANTEED

IN A COSTUME OF LONG AGO—Dressed for a romantic role in a new picture, lovely Ann Harding demonstrates how bewitching the voluminous skirts of other years might have been. Perhaps they'll come back into favor again. Who knows? (©Fox Film corporation.)

"COMPOSITION"—A charming photographic study by C. B. Seifert of Toledo, Ohio, produced by the Fresson process, hitherto not commonly employed in America. The print has been hung in exhibits in Chicago (it was a 1930 prize winner here), in London, and in Paris.

The Sculptors

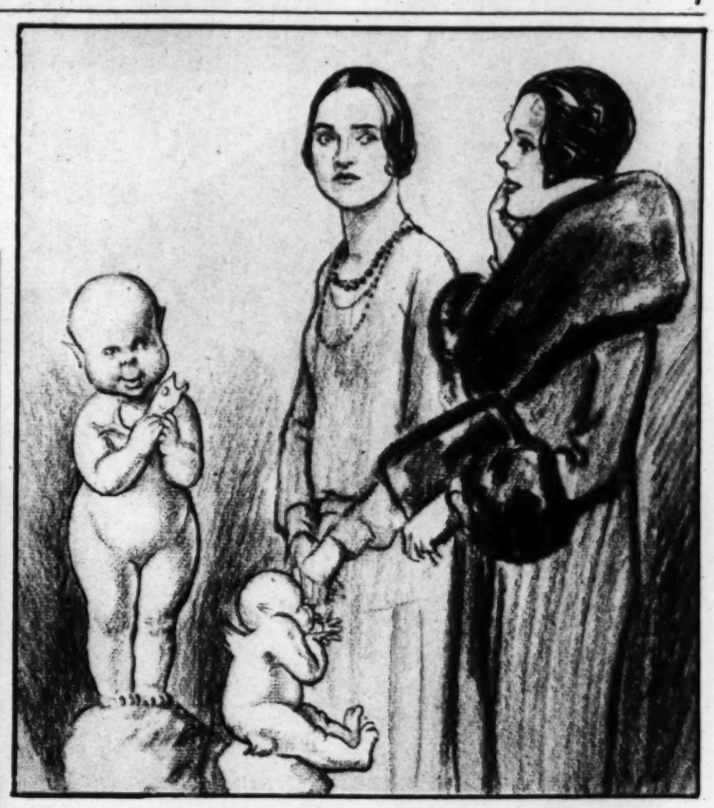
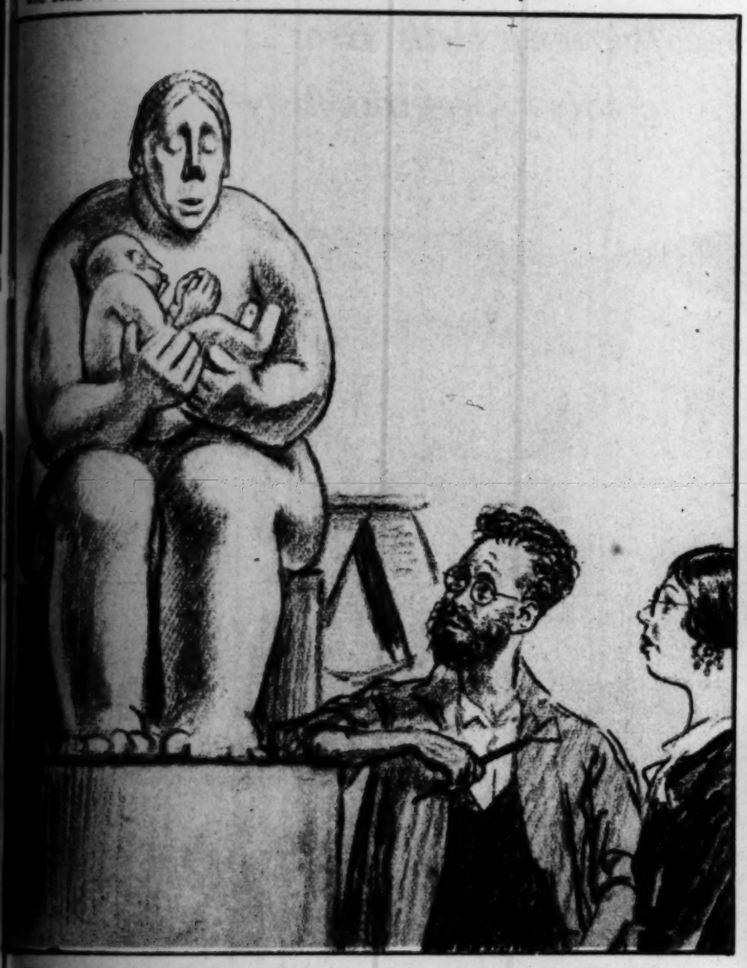
The portrait. The worst of sitting for a portrait bust is the fact that one never knows what it's going to be in the end. Sometimes a perfectly good head of a debutante will go smoothly for a dozen or so sittings, and then, all of a sudden, the sculptor will exclaim happily, "I think I shall call this 'Africa Is About to Speak' and send it to the academy show—you won't mind, will you?"

The big strong stuff. Portrait of a sculptor who goes in for crouching pieces, enjoying a touch of the dismals on a dull winter morning. The academy turned down two masterpieces, "The Unawakened Soul" and "Earth Man," more's the pity.



The cute sculpture. Ladies who specialize in elves, gnomes and pixies suitable for cute fountain pieces in suburban gardens get a fairly good break from the lay public. Because, after all, one can only say, "O, how cunning! How darling!" or "O, the sweetums" about a pixy. Which is so much better than having to listen to an amateur critic say: "Well, Josephine, I can't help feeling that there's something wrong with the left side of her face" (if it's a portrait bust), "I never saw Julia's eye sag like that, and really, no one could chew with such a jaw!"



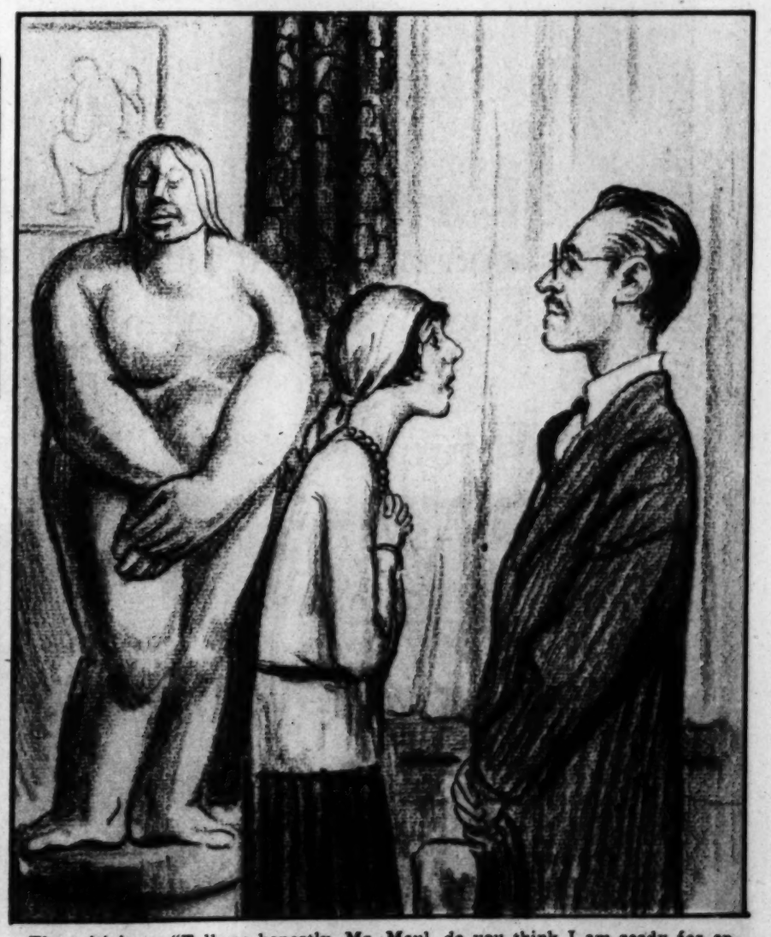
The allegory. This big seated figure is not just a portrait of Mrs. Classic, the artist's wife (although she did pose for it), indeed, no. It is full of symbolism, and many they are who think it is the best work Lucullus Classic has done.

The white slave. You've no idea how husbands of struggling young lady sculptors do hate holidays and Sundays, when, like as not, Honey will say, "Precious, do you mind posing a while this morning? My model has disappointed me again, and I do so want to work on my 'Sleeping Titan.' And just keep your eye on Junior as he plays around the studio!"

The memorial. Harold Pinkney Outburst did this charming bas-relief of a satyr getting cuddlesome with nymphs for the Eliza E. Cumbersome memorial, and it is going to be placed in front of the city hall.

The Figurine. Karl Simmerby does small but expensive figurines out of tin, zinc, tinfoil or leather (just as he feels), and the smaller they are, the larger the price tag.

The specialist in animals. Miss Norine Bent sticks pretty closely to the animal world. See how intense she is over the finishing touches to "Wombat at Bay."



The criticism. "Tell me honestly, Mr. Maul, do you think I am ready for an exhibition?" "Yes, and then again, no. I think you have not yet completely found yourself. In another year, I should say, you will be ripe."

Only this coffee

can be so rich, so fragrant, so satisfying, because no other coffee is roasted the way Hills Bros is roasted . . . evenly . . . continuously

. . . a little at a time

HILLS BROS COFFEE WOULD NEVER HAVE THE FLAVOR THAT MAKES IT SO WELCOME IF IT WERE ROASTED BY ORDINARY METHODS . . . THE SECRET IS HILLS BROS' PATENTED, CONTINUOUS PROCESS—CONTROLLED ROASTING

Coffee drinking became a new joy when Hills Bros. discovered the perfect way to roast their famous blend. For by their continuous process of roasting a few pounds at a time instead of in bulk, rare aroma and delicious flavor are developed, such as no other coffee has.

As a cook, you can see the value of Hills Bros.' patented process. It is in harmony with your rule of preparing your choicest food. When you handle small quantities you can keep everything under control—mixing, seasoning, cooking. And likewise, Hills Bros. can control the roasting of every berry.

When you open a can of Hills Bros. Coffee it is as rich in aroma and flavor as when it came from the roasters. The vacuum can in which it is packed excludes air which destroys the flavor of coffee. Ordinary cans, even if air-tight, will not keep coffee fresh.

Try Hills Bros. Coffee. It is sold everywhere. Ask for it by name and look for the Arab—the trade-mark—on the can.

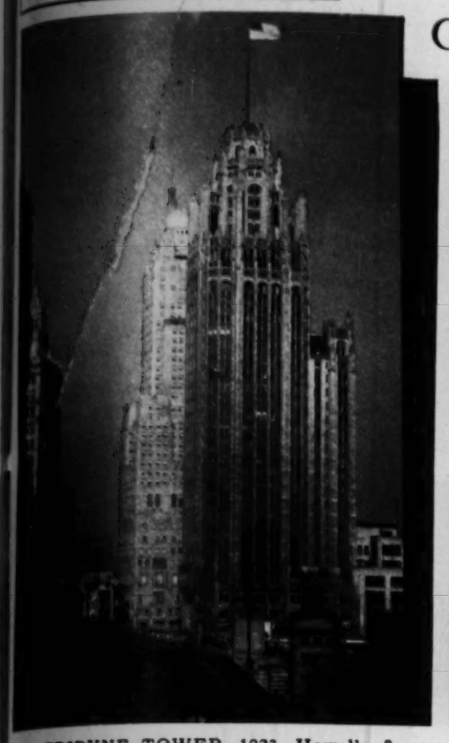
CHICAGO'S CENTURY OF ARCHITECTURAL PROGRESS

(Presented in four periods, of which this, the last, deals with the contemporary architectural scene.)



TRIBUNE TOWER, 1923, Howells & Hood, architects. It was the chosen design in a great competition, a symposium of architectural ideas that solved the baffling problem of the skyscraper.
(Tribune photo.)

333 N. MICHIGAN, the first building in Chicago to utilize to the full the lessons of the Tribune competition, is entirely modern in its lack of cornices and in its use of new forms of ornament and material. Holabird & Root are the architects.

THE PALMOLIVE BUILDING, 1928, 37 stories in height, rising above the Gothic foreground of the Fourth Presbyterian church, provides an interesting contrast between the modern style and an ancient one. Holabird & Root are the architects.

THE BOARD OF TRADE, 1929, overtowering the financial canyon of La Salle street. On either side are corniced classic structures of the preceding era. Holabird & Root are the architects, and John Storrs the sculptor.
(Hedrich-Blessing photo.)

THE CARBIDE AND CARBON BUILDING, 1928, is a daring application of color and illumination to the modern skyscraper. The walls are dark green and the crown gold. Burnham Bros. are the architects.

THE MAGNIFICENT HOME of the Chicago Civic opera and the Civic theater, completed last year, as seen from the river side. Graham, Anderson, Probst & White are the architects of this unique skyscraper-temple of culture at 20 North Wacker drive.

THE MERCHANDISE MART, with its 17 stories and 91 acres of floor space, is the largest enclosed building in the world. Graham, Anderson, Probst & White are the architects of the record-breaking structure.

THE PLANETARIUM, inaugurated last year, created a sensation with its success in applying the new architecture to a unique problem. Ernest H. Grunsfeld Jr. is the architect; its significant sculpture is by Alphonse Iannelli.
(Hedrich-Blessing photo.)

THE POWHATAN APARTMENTS show the advance of the modern style in the realm of the skyscraping apartment building. The spandrels between the windows are brightly colored. Robert S. De Golyer & Co. and Charles Morgan are the architects.

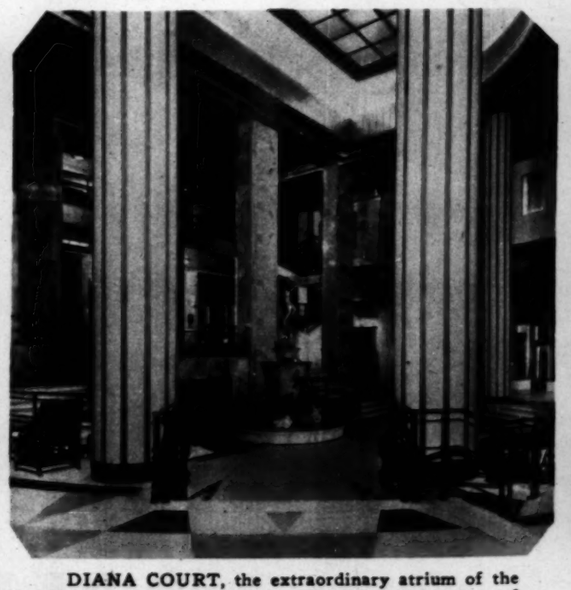
THE LOBBY of the Chicago Motor club, 1927, a brilliant example of modernism in decoration. The color scheme is silver and gray. John W. Norton painted the murals, and Holabird & Root are the architects.



DIANA COURT, the extraordinary atrium of the Michigan Square building. The beautiful statue of Diana by Carl Milles, the celebrated Swedish sculptor, glows in a resplendent setting of modern architecture. Holabird & Root are the architects.

1301 ASTOR STREET—Modernism has invaded the smaller building, and its clean lines and surfaces seem to have detracted nothing from the homelike qualities of this residential apartment building. Philip Maher is the architect.
(Hedrich-Blessing photo.)

(Prepared by Thomas E. Tallmadge, F. A. I. A., of the committee on public information, Chicago chapter, Eugene H. Klaber, chairman.)

GUESTS FROM ABROAD—Mrs. John W. Henderson and her son, John W. Jr., have come from their home in Scotland for a visit with Mrs. Henderson's parents, Representative and Mrs. Richard Yates of Illinois.

THE DIRECTOR OF THE MARIONETTES—Remo Bufano, who stages one of the three works to be presented this afternoon and tomorrow evening at the Goodman theater by the International Society for Contemporary Music. The work in question is De Falla's "Master Peter's Puppet Show," which, says Mr. Moore of the music desk, is "a puppet show within a puppet show." The Glass that Cheers Like the Beer of Old

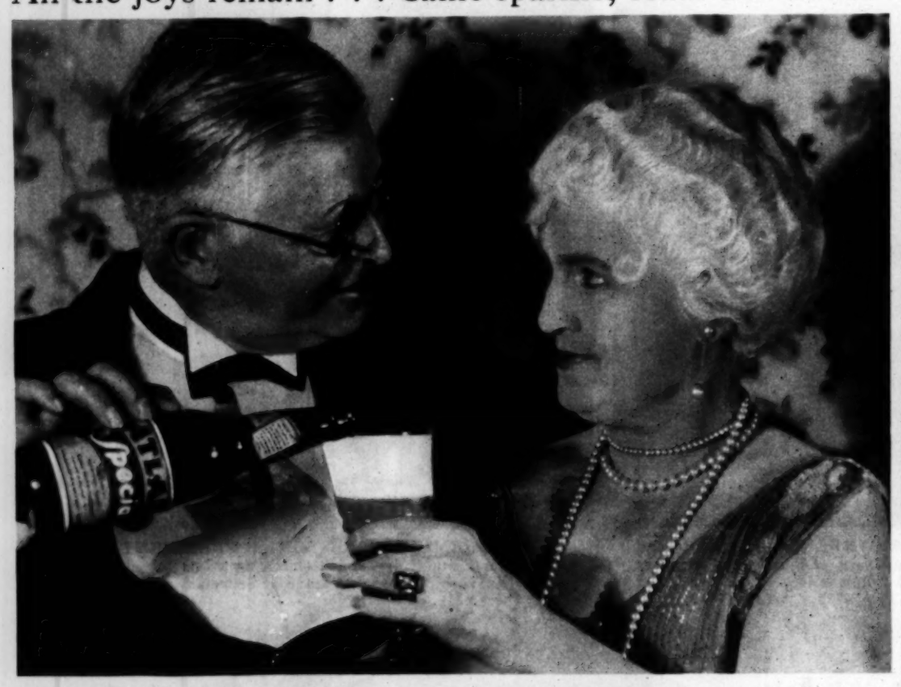
All the joys remain . . . Same sparkle, foam and flavor



The old-time bottle of beer is something that many miss. Some are seeking like effects in home brews, in near-beers or in other drinks. But they fail to find them, for they are not there.

Atlas Special Brew is made to bring those old days back. It is brewed exactly like the old-time Atlas, always the leader in Chicago. The same masters brew it with the same old care. It has the same quality, same age, same purity. It has the same sparkle, foam and flavor. It brings you all the old delights, all the aids to good digestion.

After the process is finished, we evaporate most of the alcohol. That is the only difference, and you cannot discover it.

The Benefits of Beer

No need to miss beer. No need of makeshifts, flat, green or impure. You have the best you ever had in Atlas Special Brew.

If you liked the zest and flavor, they are here. If you liked the mellowness, it's here. We treat the water in this Brew to bring you that rare European flavor.

If you liked purity, here you have it at its utmost. Atlas Special Brew is sterilized, gradually cooled, filtered through white wool pulp, then pasteurized in the bottle. A famous laboratory certifies the purity on each bottle.

If you liked the aids to digestion, they were esters and aldehydes. Both are here in full. If you liked the tonic-effects, they were those aids to digestion, plus hops.

What Not to Do

Don't expect from green "near-beers" any of the old helps or delights. Don't expect them from home brews, wretched and impure.

Atlas Special Brew offers you the best that all the ages have produced in a malt-and-hop brew. Get it.

Atlas Special Brew is supplied by over 30,000 grocers, delicatessen, confectionery and drug stores in Chicago and surrounding states. It is also served at most restaurants, hotels and clubs. It costs only 15c a bottle, much less by the case of 24 bottles. Be careful of the brand—Atlas Special Brew. Look for the green Atlas Special label on each bottle. Atlas Brewing Company, 2107 Blue Island Avenue, Chicago, Ill. ··· ask the salespeople. They will tell you why "this season's clothes need Ivory"

Whether its shining windows twinkle forth upon New York's famous Avenue—or upon impressive State Street, Chicago, or the gay Wilshire Boulevard of Los Angeles—the fine shop this season holds daintier, prettier fripperies than ever . . .

This is the year of filmy draperies and laces. "Lingerie touches." Subtle pastel colors. Skilful "foundation garments" of satin and elastic and rayon. Fashion is feminine. Feminine. Distracting. And more fragile than ever.

And so, you find—wherever you shop—that salespeople in the leading stores are more earnest than ever in their advice, "Protect these fine things with Ivory."

"Safe—in pure Ivory Suds"

Recently twenty-three young women visited the country's famous stores both East and West. They shopped just as you might and found that an overwhelming majority of the salespeople were cautioning their customers—"Yes, you can wash these delicate things safely—but use Ivory Soap."

"Ivory is safer for this season's delicate colors," they said. "These new girdles really last longer if you wash them with Ivory—satin and elastic are so sensitive to a stronger soap." "This year the silk manufacturers are being careful about washing directions. They are suggesting 'Ivory,' or else they say 'a pure soap'—and certainly you can't use a purer soap than Ivory."

Salespeople feel safer when they recommend Ivory. They know that the last word in soap-purity and gentleness is said with "Ivory." Ivory Soap, or Ivory Flakes which are pure Ivory, too.

And you can feel safer when you use Ivory. You know that you need have no question about your soap. Ivory is so gentle and kind that it protects colors and fabrics. It makes your fine things wear longer.

WHY—SWEDISH MASSAGE OFFERS YOU SPLENDID REWARDS

Swedish Massage and Physio-Therapy is a valuable ally in relieving human suffering. Its beneficial use in the treatment of specific cases has been thoroughly demonstrated in the great hospitals and clinics as well as in private practice.

Every thoroughly equipped hospital and most every sanitarium has its Physio-Therapy department. Doctors, clubs and institutions throughout the country are seeking those proficient in genuine Swedish methods of Massage and Hydro-Therapy as taught at the National College. But coupled with this demand is the further fact that we have assisted many of our graduates to establish themselves in business, serving their own clientele.

An opportunity to earn part or all of your tuition in our large clinic—the Chicago General Health Service is also given our students.

Spend a whole day or evening in our classroom WITHOUT CHARGE OR OBLIGATION and learn how you, too, can become an expert in this fascinating field.

AUTOMOBILES FOR SALE.

EVERY CAR IN OUR STOCK REDUCED $200

REGARDLESS OF ORIGINAL COST

A SELECTION OF 225 CARS IN OUR BIG SHOWROOM

Studebakers, Buicks, Chevrolets, Packards, Chryslers, Fords, Nashes—in fact, all popular makes and models are included in this epoch making used car sale. Every auto in our place has been reduced $200, regardless of original cost.

No matter what you buy, you are protected by the famous Studebaker Used Car Pledge that guarantees 5 days' free driving trial.

HUPMOBILE 8 SEDAN. This Hupp was oiled and greased every 500 miles by the original owner and now it's in top notch condition throughout. Has 4 whl. brakes, shutter front, snubbers, driving light, spare tire, bumpers, etc. A real pick-up at $345.

FORD TUDOR SEDAN. One of the very latest model A's, that looks and runs as though it had never been driven a mile. Has very full equipment and will not remain 24 hours at our price of $349.

ESSEX COACH. 1929 that was only driven a few thousand miles. The finish sparkles like a new dollar and the upholstery appears unworn. 4 whl. brakes and a wealth of extras. $350.

CHANDLER 8 SEDAN. 1929 Royal 75 that we recommend as one of our very best buys. It was only driven Sundays and evenings for pleasure purposes and the result is it's really in new condition today. Has shock absorbers, bumpers, spare tire, and other extras. Special for $495.

PIERCE-ARROW SEDAN. Model 80 7 pass. that was owned by a wealthy family and was chauffeur driven. It's equipped with 4 whl. brakes, Houdaille shock absorbers, bumpers, spare tire, etc. This Pierce is a "knockout" and will be sold quickly at $485.

STUDEBAKER CONV. COUPE. 1930 Sport Cabriolet that was only driven 800 miles. This is the car pictured in full page Tribune used car ad today. Painted a beautiful canary yellow and has wire wheels, fender well, rumble seat, and many valuable extras. Sold for almost $2,000 a few months ago. Now $1,185.

WILLYS KNIGHT SEDAN. 1928 Great 8 that never left the Chicago block. The finish has not a mar on it and the upholstery is luxurious. Has Borge white wall tires that have little mileage and only $175 worth of extras. A real bargain at $495.

BUICK SEDAN. 1928 Mast. 6 that was owned by a retired capitalist in conjunction with two other cars. Was used very little, and as it will give the second purchaser the car satisfaction. Has driving light, shock absorbers, 6 practically new tires and other extras. Only $495.

LINCOLN SEDAN. Here is an expensive coach and Brunn custom body. The equipment includes 4 whl. brakes, shutter front, wire wheels, side mounts, seat covers, bumpers, etc. This Lincoln is in splendid condition throughout and it's a positive steal at $585.

AUBURN 8 ROADSTER. Late model with spacious rumble seat, new tires, side mounts and many extras. This is the finest and cheapest looking Roadsters we ever saw, and it runs like clockwork. Only $595.

CHRYSLER SEDAN. 1929 model 65 with wire wheels and very full equitment. A thorough examination of the car and a personal demonstration will convince you that it is in brand new shape today. Marked at $595, for immediate sale.

NASH CABRIOLET. 1929 Spec. 6 that was owned by a Gold Coast society woman and only given occasional driving. Inspect it carefully from bumper to bumper and you'll agree that it's 100% perfect. Has many valuable extras and new tires. $685.

STUDEBAKER SEDAN. 1930 Dictator 8. The motor carries a 30 day free service guarantee. Every detail of the interior and exterior is in the original new car condition. Priced $250 for this sale. Now $795.

STUDEBAKER PRESIDENT SEDAN. 1929 8, 5 that is one of the finest "used" cars we have owned. You would never know it had been driven 20,000 miles. Was equipped. Sold for over $2,000 a short time ago. Now $1650.

LA SALLE SEDAN. This car is easily worth hundreds of dollars more than the price we are asking for it. Has 4 whl. brakes, side mounts, shock absorbers, driving light, bumpers, etc. Motor is A1. Today, $895.

CORD TOURING SEDAN. Only driven a few months. No description would do justice to this car. Come in and look it over—see it yourself. Has $250 worth of extras, 4 wire wheels, fender well, khaki top, etc. Offered at only a fraction of its original cost.

FIRST UMBRELLA CARRIED IN U. S. CAUSE OF RIOT

Man Mobbed and Shield Torn to Shreds.

BALTIMORE.—The umbrella today is as common a sight as the straw hat, but the man who was the first to venture out with it in this country might be called a martyr. That was in Baltimore in 1772. A Baltimore man bought an umbrella from a ship that had just returned from a trip to India, where the umbrella was used as a sunshade. On his way home with his purchase the idea of using the umbrella as a rain shield suggested itself to him. At the first sign of rain he paraded with his new weather shield down the street.

At the sight of it women ran from fright; horses became wild. The children were braver. They banded together in groups and followed the staunch innovator, staring with wonderment at his novel rain shield. Soon the innovator was threatened with fists from the drivers as well as the rank and file of the citizenry for disrupting the peace of the town. He was mobbed and his umbrella torn to shreds.

Nation Adopts Fad.

The news of this episode spread far and wide. To the Philadelphians, who were more liberal with innovations, the idea of a rain shield, such as the umbrella, was very appealing, and before long the umbrella became a common sight in that city. New York was next to adopt the umbrella, and the rest of the country followed the lead. In some villages it was considered a mark of distinction to be seen with an umbrella.

The first umbrellas were, at best, clumsy affairs. They were heavy and unsightly. They came with long handles, with the ribs made of whalebone and the covering of heavy cotton or oiled silk. Opening and closing an umbrella was an ordeal. Later gingham was used for the covering, which caused the umbrella to be lighter. The most notable invention was made by Samuel Fox in 1852, who made an umbrella that was both light and strong, as well as graceful in appearance.

History of Shield.

The umbrella, as a sunshade, dates back to ancient times. The sculptured remains of Nineveh and Egypt depict the king and his suite going in procession with umbrellas carried over their heads. In India the umbrella had a distinct place among the royalty. Some of the princes even carried among other titles, "The Lord of the Umbrella." In 1855, while addressing the governor general, the king of Burma referred to himself as "the monarch who reigns over the great umbrella-wearing chiefs of the eastern countries." China used the umbrella as a sunshade.

In Greece and Rome the umbrella was a lady's luxury. Men considered it effeminate to be seen with an umbrella. It is not known whether the article was ever used as a protection from rain.

It was not until the end of the middle ages that the umbrella made its appearance in Europe. The traveler, John Hanyway, who died in 1786, was the first Englishman who was seen habitually carrying an umbrella.

Cuban Library Offers English Language Books

HAVANA.—Further evidence that the English language is becoming more and more widely used in Havana is seen in the establishment here of a circulating library, making available an extensive collection of English books. Some time ago Cuba announced that the study of English was to be compulsory in grade schools and as most of the students are well advanced, the English library has a definite place for students as well as English speaking residents of Cuba.

Springtime Models Straight from Paris

The plain eggshell colored coat of smooth twill at the extreme left and the printed crêpe frock on the small figure at the lower right, combining eggshell and brown, are a Lelong color contrast idea.

Second—Maggy Rouff makes the black jacquard crêpe coat of this ensemble just like a dress tunic, and ties it up with black and white bows. The dress of the same embossed crêpe has a deep yoke of white that makes puffed tops to the sleeves.

Bruyere makes the hit of the new season with the blue wool coat, shown third, which substitutes eyelet embroidered cloth collar and cuffs for fur. The frock is of pale gray georgette trimmed with blue buttons.

Last—Suzanne Talbot supplies the season's sensation with these evening pajamas in brown and gold printed silk. There is no more than five inches of back to the waist, and this is crushed down to three. However, the jacket covers up the bareback revelation, and the pajama trousers can't be distinguished from a skirt.

Kentuckians to Hold Annual Party Tuesday

Club Furthers Education Among Mountaineers.

By Roberta Nangle.

THE Kentucky society of Evanston and the North Shore is to hold its annual party on Tuesday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Avery of Evanston. There will be a musical and dramatic program, and the husbands, who are to be guests of the members, will be given a pleasant evening unmarred by any plea for funds for the society's work.

Only once a year do the members of this organization get together for a purely social evening. At all their other affairs the social aspect is incidental to the philanthropic motive which inspired the founding of the society.

The membership is composed of native daughters of Kentucky who have banded together to help their mother state in caring for her mountain people. The group was organized in 1921, with Mrs. William A. Pusey as the founder and first president. She was succeeded by Mrs. Vance C. Roberts, Mrs. Eugene J. Buffington, and Mrs. Cora McKee Conner, the present presiding officer. In the decade since its origin the society has grown from a small number to an enrollment of 140 members.

Educational Aims.

Its principal object is the advancement of educational work at the Hindman Settlement school in Knott county, Ky., where about 300 mountain boys and girls receive, in addition to a regular school course, industrial training, instruction in modern farming, domestic science, home nursing, etc. The society also is interested in Kentucky historical research and the preservation of its traditions.

Eighteen scholarships are now being supported by the organization and two by its junior auxiliary. Clothing, hospital supplies, layettes, and hundreds of gifts for Christmas and Easter are sent regularly by the school. Recently a contribution of $150 was given to the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs for the student loan fund.

Within the last week, in response to an appeal from the president in behalf of the suffering mountaineers, the members have collected funds sufficient for the purchase of at least three thousand pounds of food and hundreds of warm garments for men, women, and children. All of this will be distributed to the needy in Knott, Breathitt, and adjoining counties by the field secretary of the Hindman school.

Protectorate's Annual Report Reveals Vagaries of Cupid

By the Rev. John Evans.

[Further church news will be found in the Metropolitan Section.]

A mixture of desperate need for food, clothing, shelter, and employment, and amusing vagaries of Dan Cupid were revealed in the 1930 report of Mrs. Minnie M. Chapman, superintendent of the Woman's Church Federation protectorate presented to the 500 persons who attended the annual meeting at the Morrison hotel.

MRS. MINNIE M. CHAPMAN

According to her report, Mrs. Chapman pointed out that the organization gave aid to 1,021 girls, 2,683 women, 32 children, 818 immigrant women and girls, 127 immigrant children, and 84 immigrant men, most of the latter being fiancés of immigrant brides. Represented in this group were 42 nationalities and 49 religious denominations, the total number of 4,765 representing a 9 per cent increase over the number who came to the protectorate for aid in 1929.

While unemployment and problems of the 1933 fair loomed greatest during the past year, the Morrison hotel audience seemed especially interested in problems brought to the protectorate by the arrival of immigrant brides-to-be. The way of a maid with a man is a source of constant concern on the part of staff workers of the protectorate who are responsible for the European girls coming to Chicago to wed sweethearts whom in many cases they have not seen for years.

Delay the Ceremony.

Each of the 54 immigrant girls, mostly from Germany and Sweden, who came to Chicago last year to be married here, presented a different problem. Some couples were ready to be married at once, but in many cases either the man or the girl would get "cold feet" and want to delay the ceremony. Sometimes the young man, having provided several hundred dollars for his fiancée's journey to America, is willing to delay the marriage for a time in order to save some money as well as provide opportunity for the girl to become Americanized. She becomes self-supporting in a few months and decides that she has changed her mind about getting married.

Then there is the case of Freda, who fell in love with the brass buttons of a ship's officer on the trip to New York. She came on to Chicago and immediately married the man she was pledged to, as she understood that this was required by law; after the ceremony, however, she informed him she was in love with the man she met on the boat and that she wanted to have the marriage annulled. After several days of argument the unhappy husband appealed again to the protectorate. Freda, however, was determined to go to the officer and was on the point of taking a certain train for New York.

Meanwhile, investigations of the officer had been conducted by the protectorate with the result unfavorable to that individual. Somehow it was contrived that Freda missed her train. Now it was too late to go, as the man's ship had sailed for a three weeks' voyage. Then Freda went to a German boarding home to think things over. Within a week she called her husband. Today they are happily married, the parents of a baby girl, and useful citizens of their community.

More Americans Seek Help.

As an effect of unemployment the report of the protectorate pointed to an increase of 214 per cent in the number of persons who came asking financial assistance as compared to the number in 1929. There was a de-

CLUB ETHICS

By Maude Swalm Evans.

THE district president attended an all day meeting of the Arco club and afterward accepted an invitation of the Arco president to have tea with the officers.

"Your meeting was most interesting to me," she told the members. "You certainly have an active, wide awake club."

"It's too bad that unpleasantness had to come up while you were here," regretted the vice president. "I'm afraid you'll think we're a quarrelsome lot. The work of the two chairmen who had the sparring match overlaps a bit and they watch each other like hawks when either one approaches the border line."

"I didn't mind it," the district secretary assured them. "In fact, I rather liked it. You can't complain of any lack of interest. Isn't it unique to have chairmen so anxious to claim work?"

"They're not after the work. It's the rights of their respective committees they're protecting," explained the treasurer. "I suppose there are rights of one kind or another to be protected in every club."

"Indeed there are," agreed the district secretary. "I visited a club last week that was having a hectic time because its advisory committee insisted on protecting the rights of the club from invasion by the board of directors."

"'Advisory committee' seems to be a misnomer," remarked the club secretary.

"You see, the advisory committee of this particular club is composed of presidents, and ex-vice presidents," observed the district secretary, "and the acts of the existing board are always under question."

"Trouble, and more trouble," commented the club secretary.

"Anyway, it was a pretty clash I witnessed and I couldn't resist telling the president I'd enjoyed it," added the district secretary.

"Probably the president was the only one who didn't really appreciate it," contributed the treasurer.

Hold Everything

ONE of the favorite anecdotes of Mrs. Clair E. More, who, by the way, dashed off to Florida last week in search of that southern climate, concerns the Red, White, and Blue carnival held last spring at the old Potter Palmer mansion. Mrs. More, as chairman, had been given the tower room for a private office, into which one day there "snuck" a funny little man who tap-tapped with his cane all around the walls. He seemed not to hear questions addressed to him. But just as the perturbed committee decided to call the police, the absorbed little stranger turned around and, with a beaming smile, proclaimed, "Wal, I told 'em when I put in this wall, there wouldn't be a crack in it for fifty years!"

Many Methods of Facial Care; Choose One That You Prefer

By Antoinette Donnelly.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—"Some time ago you wrote an article on facial exercises for the preservation or correction of facial contour. However you were uncertain of their merits for any practical experience, but you mentioned that you were going to observe their effects over a reasonable period of time.

"What do you find? Do they stretch and squeeze the skin into more wrinkles than would have developed without the exercises, or do they prove to be the real and natural method of bringing the circulation into the facial tissues for their upbuilding? Certain beauty specialists recommend absolutely nothing but the gentlest forms of stroking and massage for the face while others are just as positively in favor of stretching and exercising ideas. Others advocate the slapping and patting régime. Now, from your wide experience, what do you think proves to be the most efficient method to date, for preserving the full, round contour of face and chin of the average woman of 30 or there around?

"AVIS B."

It is a wonder the above question is not asked oftener, what with so much confusion about what to do with a face and chin to keep it ready for entrance in the schoolgirl class. I remember the exercises referred to in the opening query very well. At the time [and still] they struck me as being rather ridiculous. Or, rather, the idea of expecting women to do them seemed most awfully farfetched. Frequently there comes to my notice a program for beautifying or reducing that just hasn't the sound of common sense in it, and I've seen so many of them come on the scene and vanish quite as rapidly that I have learned to reserve a decision until there is strong evidence that the particular treatment has merit.

You have no idea how many gadgets of one sort and another are experimented with in the course of a year and the motive, in my opinion, is an attempt to discover something new that women will fall for. Of course, it's good experimenting, for women do fall for almost anything in their eagerness for beauty. All the gadgets are not phony, to be sure. But it is a great market if you just strike something that catches on. Hence, the experimenters.

Actress Indorsed Them.

The particular facial exercises referred to were supposed to bear the indorsement of a well known actress. Maybe she did them once or twice—once when she was getting her picture taken doing them and once in rehearsal for the pictures. She's young and beautiful and neither face nor chin has a droop, anyway. Maybe I shouldn't have passed the subject on, but I, too, am ever on the lookout for beauty news to offer you.

Anyway, the year has not changed my opinion that you could do more kindly to a face than put it through a daily dozen of brow twistings and mouth screwings and cheek stretchings. After all, the facial muscles in the course of a lady's day do get quite a bit of exercise, what with her emotions at work and her jaw fairly constantly motivated by her tongue, and her smiles and her frowns and her own special little facial mannerisms. I'm for letting the face off hard, acrobatic work. In fact, with the evidence we have of overworked muscles due to this emotion and that, what the average facial muscle needs is poise.

Until we have better indorsed facial calisthenics I think we'd better put our faith in calmer moods, good face lotions, cold water, and massage. I don't think the psychological value of making hideous faces at one's self in the mirror is good. And we women surely know by now how much the psychological value of this treatment and that influences the actual looks at the end of said treatment. The theory that those women who pay ridiculously high prices, let's say, for a facial [and some of them seem sinfully high] think they're better looking for the excess money is sound—to them. They are of the type that think nothing is good unless it is expensive. It's fair enough to exact high toll of them, then. But for you and me and the other woman forbidden the extravagance by virtue of the stork shoot-

New Ensembles Show Decided Color Contrast

Dismal Blacks Give Way to Lighter Shades.

Paris Snapshots.

There's a wave of high visibility invading Paris evening fashions, begun with Vionnet's transparent evening frocks over silken bathing suit slips, continued in Patou's frocks slit to the knees, and further advanced by Manebocher's chiffon frocks that have underskirts well above the knees, or very slender trouser slips. Meantime, the skirt, however transparent, remains long.

White slippers are the latest thing for evening wear with black or white frocks.

Manebocher introduces short sleeved ermine Eton jackets for spring evenings and Fourrures Max are launching broadtail vests to get us into our tailored suits and out of our fur coats early.

Chanel makes having a cold in the head a pleasure, by making huge voile handkerchiefs the newest craze. Her patchwork scarfs of plaid jersey are another chic detail.

By Bettina Bedwell.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—[Special.]—This is a springtime story, and a colorful one. All about how Paris is calling us women to the colors of style, to combat the winter-wide depression of black, off-blacks and other sundry, murky shades, and to line up for brighter times ahead. Colors are, this moment, being received in the best circles abroad, and the more they contrast, the better they look. Something bright and something sober, married into an indissoluble color union—that's the outstanding message of first spring fashions. Gets the Parisienne out of the one color rut, and she's taking to it like the unemployed take to the apple cart.

This new color combination business is new. It's attacking the entire clothes line, and in various ways, not only in the old reliable mixture of dark coat and bright or light dress. Like as not the coat of the earliest spring ensemble will be the bright member of the ensemble combination. It will be bright and short, or light and medium long, so that a bird's-eye view of the ensemble reveals instanter that there is a dark and sober dress inside the wrap, because you can see considerable skirt below the coat.

Suits, too, separate on the color question, the jacket taking to one color and the skirt another. They may even go further, and divide into plain jacket and patterned material skirt, or the reverse. Sometimes skirt and jacket will both be patterned in the same way—say checked—and in differing colors. Lelong does this with new spring suits, having a dark checked skirt and a light checked jacket. Tunics, vests and overblouses fill in the style need for contrast in heaps of Paris ensembles, but you already know about this.

Old Stand-by Revived.

Patou is reviving the perennial stand-by in contrasts, the plain coat and bright printed dress, with the coat lining following the suit of the dress idea. Worth announces a program of contrast in jacketed ensembles, and abandons long coats for many daytime occasions.

All the Paris dressmakers put contrasting furs on their spring coats, and match the dress to the color of the fur. Fur is omitted from many coats altogether and some contrast of cloth or detail is substituted, if no more than a belt of another shade than the garment.

Accessories, if nothing else, give a peppy color contrast to the ensemble. Matching's out of order. A belt, bag, shoes and hat of a lively shade will do wonders for the anemic chic of the late winter ensemble. These details in blue, to go with a black outfit, are one of the newest Paris colorschemes. I don't mean turquoise blue, but a rich flag or pervenche blue. Rust, tomato and strawberry red with either black or brown clothes will be chic color contrast notes in early spring, and green details are legion. They're worn with gray, with black, with white, with brown and with dark blue. Jade is a green that goes well in details, and so does Tipperary.

All green costumes abound and they call for soft contrasts such as ivory, eggshell or gray. A nice, conservative color scheme that's chic is ash-rose with brown. Black and white contrasts go on forever, and they're safe, sane and smart.

Hats and Shoes Piebald.

Hats and shoes are turning piebald and coming out in the two shades of first spring costumes, or when conservative they're touched up with a bit of contrasting color, in pipings, etc. Jewelry also turns bi-color, and costume jewel sets are being made up in such stones as coral with jade, emerald with pearl and sapphire with silver.

There is a dark and dangerous side to all this color mixing. One color is a harmless ingredient in the costume, but two may well explode your chic altogether, particularly if they're dynamic, i. e., brilliant. Handled rightly they can give to a hard times wardrobe a new air of prosperity. The best and safest way for the amateur to make use of color contrasts in the ensemble is to use bright color in small doses, or to combine such sane schemes as brown and white, gray and green, or black and blue.

Lelong, who is always both sane and artistic in his color contrasts, combines brown and eggshell in the spring ensemble shown in the first sketch, and this one is foolproof. The long coat is made of eggshell colored twill, fine and smooth, and is trimmed with brown astrakhan which makes the cuffs and shawl collar. The coat is cut to an incurve under the arms and is trimmed with applied bands having scalloped edges. There are upper 2756—Child's dress. Sizes 2, 4, and 6 years. Size 4 requires 2½ yards of 39 inch material with ¼ yard of 35 inch contrasting and ¾ yard of ruffling.

These Chic Designs Solve the Problem of What to Wear for the Next Few Months.

THIS bolero frock, made by pattern No. 2626, is a recent French design, and is deservedly popular. It is both smart and practical, and suitable for general daytime wear, office, and classroom.

The pattern consists of a sleeveless blouse—preferably of a contrasting color and material—and the bolero jacket and skirt, topped by a self fabric belt.

The blouse is made with a dart on each front at the underarm and a box-plait finishes the center right front. The pretty round collar is made of the blouse material and sewed to the neck of the blouse. A bias facing should be stitched on at the same time as the collar, and then the opposite edge of the facing is turned under and sewed down by hand. Before hemming the facing down, clip at close intervals all along the seam, so it won't draw when turned down.

The little jacket is easily made. The seams should be bound separately and pressed open flat. The fronts are underfaced with self material, and this facing can extend around the bottom of the blouse. Make it narrow and an even width—say, one inch finished.

The sleeves are close fitting and finished at the wrist with deep cuffs matching the collar. After the sleeve seam is pinned together, hold the sleeve up and see how the fold down the outside looks. If it is perfectly smooth, the seam has been put together right—if there is even a slight twist, release the necessary pins and shift the under seam edge—the one that has the elbow fulness—until the fold is smooth.

The gathering at the elbow should be done with tiny stitches, and this slight fulness distributed evenly so, when it is pressed, there won't be anything noticeable.

The skirt has the new box pleated treatment, and the tightened hip yoke in a pointed outline at the front tends to lengthen the figure.

Pattern No. 2756 is for a pretty little slip-on dress and bloomers that will make a pretty little maid look more adorable. The upper part of this dress is a rather deep yoke, straight across the back and cut in a deep round scalloped outline at the front. The yoke is slashed down from the neck at the center front and finished for closing; the upper edge of the little skirt is gathered both on the front and back, and stitched in place on the yoke. Of course the skirt is plain at the scalloped yoke outline. A deep hem finishes the bottom of the skirt, and the long sleeves are gathered into narrow, fitted bands. These bands and the collar are of a contrasting color.

Bloomers just peep below the edge of the skirt, and these are made of the dress material. Cotton broadcloth, gingham, dimity, and wool challis are suitable materials, and blue, pink, green, and tan are lovely colors in the more delicate shades.

Jacket suits of lightweight woolens are popular this season, and are worn by many smart young women. The pattern shown here, No. 3190, is wonderfully good looking with the bodice of the dress in a lighter blending tone. The pointed treatment of the skirt creates a flat slimness through the hips and waist, and the skirt fits smoothly—the inverted plaits at the bottom being placed so low they flare only when in motion.

The jacket is straight in line and unfrimmed—two inserted pockets on the fronts and two buttonholes and buttons completing it.

The neck of the bodice is finished with a trimming piece that is slipped through two slashes on the front of the bodice, terminating in prettily shaped ends.

Needlework

By Clotilde

THE attractive little wrap around turban shown today is made of a navy blue and a bright red wool jersey cloth. If the measurements given are followed closely no trouble will be had in making the hat. The measurements described are for a 22½ inch head size, but can be made larger or smaller to fit the wearer's head by allowing more inches for larger head size and smaller measurements for the smaller one.

To make the turban, buy one-fourth of a yard of each of the colors selected. The piece for the top crown measures 8 inches from front to back and 7 inches from side to side. This, of course, is cut in an oblong circle.

The next piece cut is for the side crown, which should measure 22½ inches long at the bottom of the side crown and 21 inches where it is joined to the top crown. This band or side crown measures 2½ inches deep in front, 2¾ inches deep in the back and 3 inches deep on both sides. This band is joined by the sewing machine, then is sewed on to the top crown, the seam is laid open and pressed flat and two machine stitchings are on both sides of the seam. The bottom of the side crown is turned under ½ inch and three rows of machine stitching are placed on this. Stitching gives the hat a little more body.

Then cut the bands for the wrap around. These are both 8 inches wide, one is 14 inches long and the other is 29 inches long. Sew each one on the length by machine, press the seams flat and turn inside out. Fold the bands so that the seam comes in the middle of the band and not near the edge; join those two bands together—one will be one color and one of another—and sew them on to the back seam of your finished side crown by machine. The long band is on the right side while the short one is on the left side.

The finished cap is set on the head well back from the front—pull it down well over the ears and in the back. Take the long band and bring it around from the right across the front, just above the eye line. Then take the long piece and bring it around the head from right to left and again to the right side. Bring the short length on band from the left side across the front and to the right side where it meets the long band. A buckle, one-half sewed on each band, is joined together at the right side. In making the turban some prefer the short band on the right side and joining the bands in the front instead of the back.

These turbans are smart for general wear.

Many Methods of Keeping the Face Beautiful

ing us down the nongold lined chimney, large sums expended need not indicate one's only hope of turning out a well groomed face.

So much for the "extravagant" claims that bob up, every now and then, be they facial contortions or facials de luxe.

Many Facial Treatments.

Now, for the divergence of opinion on methods of facial care. Well, even among surgeons major operations are not all performed identically. But what matter if the patient is relieved? Among dressmakers the seasons models are not all duplicates. Nevertheless one can look beautiful in variations of the current style. Cooks, even, may serve your needs in different cooking languages and you may thrive on any of them.

Facial treatment may be just as susceptible to the hands they fall into. That is, you may slap and pat and you may stroke with a firm, quiet gesture, according to the instructions you have learned. Stretching of the skin I'm against. But light pinching may set the blood into quick action.

The age of the skin and the neckline come into the question. Around 30 there is rarely much damage to combat. The work then is rather preventive than remedial. It's the right time to begin, too, if one hasn't done so earlier. Later on, if neglect has atrophied the muscles, more pungent action may have to be taken.

The first and certainly the most important thing to consider at this time is the carriage of the body, with particular reference to the head. Slumping must not be allowed. Many, many chins have and are crinkling, yes, and cheeks sagging because the head is not held up properly. This is more important than massage and exercise.

I cannot take a stand in favor of stroking rather than patting or slapping. Each is good, as I have observed practitioners or all forms. But stroke, pat, or slap is not half so important as the will to daily effort. It's the consistent effort that matters most, along with a good nourishing cream for dry or drying skins or skins in need of a lubricant—and most skins need it after 30. And, of course, stirring up the circulation in the face, which you may do in any of the ways suggested, always crowning the facial performance and chin with an astringent tonic—cold water always, and then afterward, if you want to, a bottled brand of your own choice.

You can always tell by the warmth and the glow in your cheeks whether the blood is moving. You can tell when it is stagnant. Now, the motion that subscribes best or most agreeably to that glow is the one that is best for you.

The chin line is a little different. Here we must withdraw the stretching objection, providing it is not only the skin that is stretched. Chins can bear stretching gracefully and profitably. And the jaw line can be caught going through chewing gum motions with advantage to the facial contour.

Health Brings Beauty.

Yet another truth comes out of my observations. That face and that chin and their respective youthful contours come under the heading of bodily care. Health for the rest of you and youth for the rest of you means a complimentary youthful chin and face line. Reduce too much, either by diet or ill health, and your face shows the ravages. Build up and your face is improved.

Go about putting new life into a jaded, nerve wrung, tired person and the face flourishes along with the rest of you. I think many women are making the mistake of visualizing themselves as totem poles with the mounted head as a feature entirely apart from the heart, the lungs, the blood, and the vital centers. It's wrong. The exercises that keep the body in first class trim, keep that chin line young, and supple and the facial contour, likewise young. Tip-top, healthy, firm muscled body fitness I'll guarantee you as the best sort of face preserver.

The stroking and the pattings, or the slappings and pinchings are accessories to the bodily work and are not to be scorned, mind you. But they are not everything, as some women are inclined to believe. As witness the beautifully massaged faces you frequently meet that miss the divine fire of health in them. They bloom after a fashion, but it is not that same bloom you see in thoroughly healthy women. The latter's looks are good for a long run.

Ankle Won Attention.

One of my overshoes had the bad habit of rubbing holes in the ankle of my stocking. There was a terrible increase in the mortality of my silk hose. To avoid this I tied a piece of white cloth around my ankle before I put on the overshoe.

Late for work the next morning I pulled off my overshoes and rushed into the office to take dictation at an executive's meeting. People don't usually notice my ankles—they're not that kind—but now every one seemed to be looking at them. I shifted my feet uneasily. Then some one grinned broadly, and I glanced down to find myself looking exactly like a chicken tagged for market—with the white cloth still on my ankle. G. C.

Etiquette of Flowers

By Helen Bartlett

Simple Rules Govern the Sending and Wearing of Blossoms.

A READER inquires about the etiquette of sending and selecting flowers and also asks for a few suggestions about obtaining the best effect with flowers as decoration. She says she's tired of having the usual assortment of bright flowers about her house and wants to put a little more thought to achieving better effects.

She inquires first about sending flowers to friends who have had a death in the family. We're often asked about this. Flowers should always be addressed to the next of kin, never to the deceased person. Also a certain amount of care should be taken with the selection of such flowers. A large, somber wreath, for instance, would hardly be sent at the death of a child. Fragile, colorful flowers would be a better choice. And the wreath would be a better choice than a bouquet of tea roses for a man.

The old fashioned crêpe of depressing memory is not used now. Instead of the black ribbons and heavy sheaves of palms, florists now use lavender, purple or gray for elderly persons, and for others any selected shades that are delicate and appropriate. These are not necessarily fashioned into wreaths or sprays. Often a simple bouquet in a concealed vase is hung on the doorway.

Flowers for Weddings.

There is considerable latitude allowed in the selection of flowers for weddings. A bride may decide in favor of a prayer book rather than a bouquet, and at quite informal weddings a corsage or boutonniere is usually preferred.

It seems to us that little ingenuity is used concerning the usual bride's bouquet. The usual shower affair of lilies of the valley, narrow white ribbon, and a center of gardenias or roses seem to us a bit tiresome.

For a winter wedding lilies are a good choice, but they must be carried with grace. The best flowers for the men at a wedding are gardenias, but white carnations are great favorites also.

And now we come to the use of flowers for the table. There are quite a few don'ts involved. A table should never be crowded with flowers. It does not create a good effect and does hasten the wilting—which is anything but attractive. Strewing flowers about the cloth is not a good plan generally; unless done by an expert the effect is apt to be messy rather than artistic.

Decorative flowers for the table should not be so tall as to interfere with the view of diners across the board; neither should they be highly scented.

The selection of flowers should depend considerably on the general color scheme of the dining room and on the particular color in damask, glassware and china. Colored damask and bright glassware are here to stay.

All White Bouquets.

At a supper party the other evening we were utterly charmed with the arrangement of flowers. The hostess had decided against bright bouquets and her flowers were all white. On the large table, flanked by silver candlesticks, was a lovely bouquet of white roses, white tulips and freesias, with just a tiny touch of fern. On small tables in low bowls were white sweet peas, and about the house here and there were more white bouquets—all nicely arranged. We particularly liked the all white plan, it was such a welcome change from the usual riot of color.

We were also appreciative of the arrangement of flowers in the apartment of an acquaintance. On a modernistic desk, against a green drapery, this man had placed a tall, modern vase in creamy white, filled with calla lilies—about six of them. The effect was gorgeous.

The shops are full of stunning bowls and vases these days, so there is no excuse for not having numerous and suitable flower containers. Some of these are ridiculously cheap; in fact, some of the offerings of the ten cent store are not to be overlooked.

Blossoms in Season.

Once upon a time the winter floral offerings were considerably limited, but that is certainly not the case now. A leading florist sent me a long list of flowers available and reasonable in February.

On his list I found roses, carnations, lilies of the valley, Easter lilies, calla lilies, calendulas, sweet peas, and snap dragons.

Gardenias are available now, and not at prohibitive prices. Violets, the little darlings, are also available if you want to pay a price that seems high but really isn't considering that they're out of season. Other lovely flowers on the list were gladioli, freesias, hyacinths, paper whites, jonquils, tulips, and even mignonette.

Nineteen thirty-one is a good year for flower lovers, isn't it?

There are a number of do's and don'ts in wearing flowers. Any woman who has a yen for orchids [we're not having any, thank you!] should watch her step. An orchid on a tailored suit always looks absurd to us. And a small, slight woman who affects a large and splashy corsage that is a mess of orchids, silk ribbon and feathers is disregarding one of the first principles of style—adherence to proportion. She needs something smaller and simpler, say two gardenias on a strip of white or green ribbon.

Protectorate's Report Reveals Cupid's Whims

crease in the percentage of immigrants and a 50 per cent increase in the percentage of American women and girls asking for help. Altogether 2,068 came seeking jobs. Employment was found for 744, others were referred to other agencies. The protectorate's report declared that the coming World's fair is already attracting many girls and women to this city and increasing the demands made upon this and other social agencies.

In connection with the report a plan was made for Bibles to place in the rest room of the protectorate located at 20 North Dearborn street. In these days of distress and trouble people are naturally turning to the Bible and religion. Not only are the Bibles in the rest room being used more, but five have disappeared, a type of "thievery" which is easily forgivable.

Girls at 15 Have Highest Money Value to Germans

Girls in Germany are worth more when they are 15 than they are at any other age, a group of German statisticians has found. Their value at 15 is about $10,000, it is said. At 20, this value has decreased to about $9,200; at 60, to $7,000, and at 70, to $5,000. This is based on money value and value to the state.

Maiden Meditations

By Sara Moore

THE EX-FLAPPER TO AN OLD PAL.

Pity
Gives me a pain!
What if I must Arise at midnight
Just to feed a babe?
I used to dance all night.
You were not sorry, then,
Though all I got for that
Was just
A tissue paper cap,
A tin whistle
And tomorrow's headache.

THE CHORUS QUEEN.

Rehearsal's called at 9 a. m.; at noon one stops to eat
A sandwich and a doughnut at the drug store 'cross the street.
From half-past twelve to six o'clock she's up right on her toes.
From six to seven food and rest—or so the routine goes.
From seven on to midnight she must "step," or sometimes one,
The stage director, drills her for a most uncertain "run."
At one at last she's free to play. Of course with this in mind,
Rehearsal starts at 9 a. m. Or eight, if fate's unkind.
She's free at last. The hey hey boys who ask her out to dine
Are ready for a party. They feel all set up and fine.
These jolly boys! The chorus girl's dull life they would enhance
They say, "All set to go some place? Some place where we can dance?"

Coming home from my mother's on a cold winter day my wife said, "Couldn't you have borrowed a couple of dollars till tomorrow?" A Timely Tuning In.

One evening as we were about to retire, my husband said, "I wish I knew what the correct time is so I could set the clock."

I suggested that he tune in on the radio and get the desired information. He refused to do so, saying he had tried so many times before, but with no results. I urged him to try just once more, more to tease him than anything else. Just as he tuned in, a clear voice said, "And the time is now 1 minute past 10 o'clock.

We both thought that quite a coincidence.

Puts New Life Into Dull, Tired, Faded Skin

Just a little Calonite powder sprinkled on a wet cloth and rubbed gently over the face before retiring will clear the pores of all dirt and dust and oily scum, preventing blackheads. It puts new life into dull, tired skin, so you can enjoy a good night's rest.

NIGHT COUGHING

Quick and Safe Way to Stop It!

Whatever it is due to—cold, catarrhal condition of the throat, dust irritations or smoking—night coughing can and should be stopped! Nothing will pull you down faster, for it not only deprives you of needed sleep, but it tears you to pieces.

At the first sign of a cough, take good old "Piso's for Coughs." It does the five things necessary to stop a cough and repair the damage done. It checks the cough spasm, loosens the mucus, opens the air passages and soothes the inflamed tissues. At the same time, it has a tonic value that tends to build up what the cough tears down. Only Piso's supplies these five vital effects and it contains no opiates and does not upset the stomach. Safe to give even to babies. All druggists sell Piso's in 35c and 60c sizes. Be sure you get "Piso's for Coughs."

Tribune Cook Book

By Meta Given

"We'll celebrate Saint Valentine
In a good old fashioned way
With cupids, hearts and verse and rhyme,
So don't forget the day."

IT has been more than 125 years since Charles Lamb wrote about Valentine's day and the happiness attending that time. A few lines of his dissertation run like this:

"'Not many sounds in life, and I include all urban and all rural sounds, exceed in interest a knock at the door. It gives 'a very echo to the throne where Hope is seated.' But its issues seldom answer to this oracle within. It is so seldom that just the person we want to see comes. But of all the clamorous visitations the welcomest in expectation is the sound that ushers in, or seems to usher in a Valentine."

That was in the days when everybody sent and everybody received the lovely little lacy missives decorated with hearts and cupids and inscribed with some verse of beautiful sentiment. The custom, however, is not all alive now, especially with adults. Valentines, nevertheless, are still being made and sold by the thousands because they continue to cross and intercross between the children. The legends relating to the origin of the day with its lovely emblematic colors and the verses of rhyme and sentiment appeal to the child.

Party Meal for Friends.

For this reason it is an excellent day for children's parties. And often when mothers are giving a party for the children they feel that they can, with little additional labor and expense, expand the affair and include adults. This especially applies to the party tea, luncheon, or dinner. To my mind it is a good day to prepare a party meal for friends. Hearts and cupids and the colors that are symbolic of fidelity and love offer opportunities for planning attractive decorations for both the house and the table.

Red is the color generally used for decorating the house and for the garnishing of food. Roses and carnations which also typify love often form the floral decoration. But ...se is just as appropriate because it stands for fidelity and so forget-me-nots carry out the Valentine idea as much as the roses. Choose, then, blue or red as the fancy strikes you and have a beautiful and successful party. The decorations for the house should, of course, partake of the day and the occasion, but to carry this too far is no in the best of taste.

Pleasing Combinations.

It is quite sufficient that the significant color be used in the flowers or center piece and perhaps in one or two foods. The hostess who serves the most pleasing party meal is the one who uses a good combination of foods that are not only delicious to eat but are also beautiful to see. And beauty or attractiveness includes more than the appearance of just two colors in all the foods served in one meal. One can never gain a reputation for distinctive touches and originality when everything is in the shape of hearts, bow knots, and cupids, and a red color is introduced every time that it is possible.

The five menus which we are giving cover about all of the food requirements of Valentine parties. Since the luncheon is more popular than the dinner we are offering three different ones. Besides there are two dinner menus, one tea and one menu for a children's party where adults are not present.

If the party consists of more than eight individuals it will be better to set small tables rather than gather the guests at one large one. The modern dining room does not comfortably seat more than eight.

Luncheons Nos. 2 and 3, dinner No. 1 and the tea may be served in buffet style if desired. Luncheon No. 1 and the dinner No. 2 are more conveniently eaten at tables.

Facilitate Serving.

The menus have been kept down to a few courses to facilitate serving. These may be varied, nevertheless, in many satisfactory ways. For example, in luncheon No. 2 small baking powder biscuits may be substituted, and desirably so for many, for the toast. A delicious conserve or beautiful jelly may also be added and will be a pleasing accompaniment for the hot biscuit. Olives and stuffed celery may be used to expand any of these menus. In the salad course numerous variations are possible. A fruit salad, however, should always be substituted for a fruit salad and not a vegetable salad, as this in some instances would throw the meal out of balance.

Should these menus not suit your purse or your mood, another easily prepared and served by the hostess who has to do her own work, might consist of a grapefruit cocktail, vegetable, fish or chicken salad with cheese straws, a pretty fruit jelly with whipped cream, and fancy cakes.

For an evening party sandwiches cut heart shape, olives, salted nuts, and fancy iced cakes with coffee or punch is quite sufficient.

Choose Simple Foods.

Foods for children's parties should always be simple. Nothing should be served to tempt the child to break his good eating habits. If the meal is served near the regular time it should consist of the foods usually eaten at this time of the day—those that furnish material for muscle, blood, and bone and maintain the regulatory processes of the system. Milk, green and root vegetables, and fruits adapted to the child's age should make up the meal. For the party touch some of the foods may be molded. Ice cream especially appeals when molded in heart form. The table decorations may carry out the Valentine idea more for the children's party than for adults.

If the party meal comes in the middle of the afternoon, the food should be extremely light. A glass of lemonade with a red cherry always pleases and never more than a dish of ice cream garnished with strawberries should be offered.

HEART CAKE.

1¾ cups pastry flour	1 cup fine granulated sugar
4 tsp. baking powder	½ cup egg whites
½ tsp. salt	½ cup milk
½ cup fat [half butter]	1 tsp. lemon extract
	½ tsp. almond extract

Sift flour, then measure. Resift twice with baking powder and salt. Cream fat until plastic, then add sugar gradually and continue creaming until white and smooth. Add unbeaten egg whites until mixture has the appearance of softened marshmallow. Add dry ingredients and milk alternately, then the flavoring. Turn batter into two round layer cake tins 8 inches in diameter and with the sides oiled and bottoms lined with paraffin paper. Bake in a medium oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for 10 minutes, then increase temperature to 375 degrees and bake about 15 minutes longer. Remove cake from oven; when cool place over each layer a paper pattern of a heart which is 8 inches wide at the widest point and 8 inches long. Lay the two heart shaped pieces together with White mountain icing flavored with rose and almond. Ice top and decorate top edge of heart with heart shaped red cinnamon candies or candied violets. Yield: 10 servings.

WHITE MOUNTAIN ICING.

1 cup sugar	1-3 cup water
⅛ tsp. cream of tartar or ½ tbsp. lemon juice	1 egg white, beaten until stiff

Put sugar, water, and cream tartar in pan, stir until sugar is dissolved, and bring to boiling point. Boil sirup without stirring to 240 degrees Fahrenheit, or until it spins a long thread. Pour gradually on egg white, beating constantly. Flavor as desired.

Yield: Sufficient to ice heart cake.

STRAWBERRY ICE CREAM.

1 quart well ripened strawberries	1 to 1½ cups sugar
1 tbsp. lemon juice	1½ cups coffee cream
⅛ cup milk	¼ tsp. salt

Prepare the freezer by scalding both the can and beater. Wash berries, then hull. Mash berries with potato masher or a wooden spoon. Press through a sieve. One should obtain at least 1½ cups of pulp and juice. Do not press through any of the seeds, only pulp and juice. Add lemon juice. Add milk to sugar and heat over hot water until sugar is dissolved. Cool. Add cream and salt. Add cold milk-cream mixture to berries. Freeze at once with 1 part coarse salt mixed with 6 parts chipped ice.

Yield: 1½ quarts, or 10 servings.

HEART SHAPED CROUSTADES.

Cut a loaf of white bread into crosswise slices 2¼ inches thick. With a sharp knife cut out croustades, using a paper heart pattern 3 inches wide at the widest part and 3½ inches long at the longest part of the heart. Use a heart shaped cookie cutter that is about ½ inch less in width than paper pattern. Press down on the bread to outline the wall of the croustade. With a knife or spoon hollow out the center, being sure to follow the line of the cookie cutter. With a little care the walls can be kept of even thickness and little time is required for making. Brush overoutside lightly with melted butter. Toast to a delicate brown under the broiling oven. Fill with creamed mixture and serve while hot.

DARK BREAD SANDWICHES.

Cut dark bread lengthwise of loaf in one-fourth inch slices. Spread with creamed butter. Put two slices together and cut in heart shapes. Garnish with tiny hearts cut from firm red jelly or pickled beets and insert in openings of the same size in the upper slice.

NOSEGAY ICE CREAM.

Fill paper cases with strawberry ice cream, garnish with a border of candied mint leaves and with bits of candied fruit to represent blossoms.

SHRIMP COCKTAIL.

1½ pounds shrimps	Cocktail sauce

Cook the shrimps in boiling water until they are tender—about 20 minutes. Remove the shells and intestinal tract and chill thoroughly. Canned shrimps [wet pack] may be used instead. Cover with the cocktail sauce, serve in cold glasses, and top with a shrimp.

Yield: 8 servings.

COCKTAIL SAUCES.

2 tbsps. catsup	Cayenne pepper
1 tsp. grated horseradish	Pinch salt

or

½ tsp. pepper sauce	1 tbsp. chili sauce
2 tsps. catsup	Lemon juice
¼ tsp. horseradish

TOMATO BOUILLON.

2 cups canned tomatoes	½ bay leaf
	6 cloves
1½ quarts bouillon [made from beef]	½ tsp. celery seed
	½ tsp. peppercorns
1 tbsp. chopped onion	Oysters as desired

Mix all ingredients except oysters and boil 20 minutes. Strain, cool, and clear. If desired, add 1 pint parboiled oysters.

Yield: Ten servings.

APPLE AND NUT SALAD.

2 apples	1 tsp. lemon juice
½ cup celery	¼ cup cut up pecan meats
Cream boiled dressing

Chill the apples well, then pare them and cut them into small dice. Sprinkle them with the lemon juice. Add the celery cut into small pieces and mix in the nuts. Serve the salad on crisp lettuce leaves with cream boiled dressing. Garnish with whole pecan meats. A delightful change can be made by slicing the ingredients "Julienne" style in long, thin pieces.

Yield: Five servings.

CREAM BOILED DRESSING.

1 tsp. salt	2 whole eggs
1 tsp. mustard	1 cup vinegar
Paprika	1 cup water
2 tsp. powdered sugar	1 tbsp. butter
3 tsp. flour

Mix dry ingredients, add beaten eggs, vinegar, water, and butter. Stir in double boiler or on top of stove until thick. Beat until smooth. Let cool. This will keep for some time in an ice-box. Before serving add whipped or plain cream and more sugar if a sweet dressing is desired. Two cups of whipped cream are used with the entire recipe.

The Malicious Gossip

By Doris Blake

A Real Danger to Happiness Is the Person Who Seems to Take a Fiendish Delight in Passing on Near-Truths or Plain Lies About Friends.

WE are told by those who are supposed to be acquainted with the whys of human behavior that there is a place in the world for gossip. It is the policeman of behavior, we're told. It is the fear that prevents people from hitting wide of the straight and narrow path. It is the regulator of behavior, in a good many instances.

Some people obviously have neither fear of the policeman nor do they care what people say. But a great majority of human beings are guided, to a fairly large extent, by the opinion of neighbors, friends and relatives. While there may be a good word to be said for gossip, for the gossip there is no recorded enthusiasm. The most dreaded of the human species, you might call him or her. Unhappily, gossips do not carry their insignia emblazoned across their chests so that one might be warned against them and give them no welcome. They often come in the guise of friends, and other qualities in them may serve as a diversion from the real danger of their cultivation.

Of course, we are not speaking of the harmless gossipy type of persons most of us are, in more or less mild degree. It is of the gossip who makes it his or her business to retell tales or manufacture them to the detriment of some individual. Out of nothing this type can manufacture a tale that is positively vicious. The object is to make trouble and make it whether the tale they fashion has a leg to stand on or not.

It is curious how the real gossip hates happiness. He or she can't bear to see a couple or a family or a group enjoying life or getting success. He must get busy and throw a bomb, in the hope that some one will be hurt. If he is of the very vicious group, the more that are hurt, the better.

A Malicious Tongue.

So now, bearing in mind that gossips of the vicious variety are trouble makers by nature, that they are souls gone sour, why should what they have to say sting finer people so? Here's a woman, one of those merry souls with a cheery word for everybody (and heaven only knows her kind are needed in the world), who is the victim of a nasty story concocted by a spying neighbor. No more basis for the charge of infidelity made against her than should arise against you or me, who might open the door on a book or an insurance agent and, knowing that agent is only trying to make a living, be decently polite to him.

The woman's complete life with her husband and two youngsters and their above average success inspired the malicious tongue to action. Happily, the one who was intended to learn of his wife's disloyalty was just the right man for the gossip's tale. He went hotfoot after the instigator of the neighborhood choice bit, and it is a safe bet she will not conspire to destroy confidence there again. She did not get a hearing, nor was she threatened with jail, but she was told that with just one more word from her mouth, her husband would learn what he had on his hands.

How to deal with gossips perplexes a number of people. They wonder whether it is better to laugh off the tales learned about oneself or to confront the perpetrator of them and add a tongue lashing, or what method to use.

If the power is with one to ignore what is said as unworthy of comment—peace of mind is more sure than by following any other course. The gossip's intention and hope is that the tale she tells will get back to the victim. Take that pleasure away from her and she has little to gloat over.

If one can manufacture the patience to sit out the period of annoyance unkind stories do provoke, one can reckon surely on a day when the gossip's true character is revealed and on one's own exoneration. But it is not human to wait patiently while one feels one is being slandered without justification or reason.

Won't Admit the Truth.

The trouble is that the same capacity for manufacturing lies to serve a scandal monger's need stands her in good stead when she is confronted with the charge. She lies point blank. She feigns innocence of which she was long since incapable. And there you are. Too, such is the nature of gossip that you often cannot lay your finger on the culprit, though the most convincing evidence may be at hand.

Among engaged couples you'll find the miscreant particularly active. Again you have the sour one envious of the happiness of others. She must set trouble in motion. And often not only does she set it in motion, but she keeps it going until the romance is broken.

A case in point is a girl deeply envious of one who was said to be her best friend. The best friend was about to make a happy match. In a diabolically clever manner the girl set the machinery going and a story finally got to the fiancé's ears that infuriated him. There were, it must be said in fairness to him, two details in the story's telling that agreed with the man's own knowledge. They were dates and places. It was a clear case, however, of the fiancée being given a verdict on circumstantial evidence. She was too indignant to protest her man's lack of faith, and the affair was broken up.

Weakness Aids Enemy.

Gossip victims are many—and retribution often comes slowly to the instigator. Let a woman, particularly one who has something in her life of which she is not proud, become the object of one of these scurrilous gossips attacks and her life can be made a perfect frenzy of fear. Her very weakness gives the gossip strength.

They're a bad lot—the lying gossips and the malicious ones. The world would be better off for an exterminator that would wipe them off the face of the globe. But should one be a victim, she or he should determine the motive behind a fabricated story and, if one can see that it is an attempt to destroy happiness, the only weapon to fight back with is silence.

There is this to remember: a friend does not start nor carry tales unless they are kind and encouraging ones. Therefore, if the interest is not that of a friend why give it thought?

BRIDGE BY RADIO

Next Tuesday the final broadcast of the bridge series will be devoted to questions. This broadcast will not be printed in The Tribune.

Three outstanding New York bridge authorities, as well as an expert from Denver, participated in the eleventh of Milton C. Work's radio bridge games broadcast Tuesday from station W-G-N. The New Yorkers were Ely Culbertson, editor of the Bridge World; Ralph J. Leibenderfer and E. V. Shepard, with Mrs. Lewis Todhunter from the west. They held the following cards:

MR. LEIBENDERFER.
S—J, 9, 2.
H—K, 10, 9, 6.
D—A, J, 10.
C—7, 6, 5.

MRS. TODHUNTER.
S—4, 3.
H—3.
D—8, 7, 6, 5, 4.
C—A, K, J, 10, 2.

MR. SHEPARD.
S—K, 8.
H—Q, J, 8, 2.
D—K, Q, 9.
C—Q, 9, 8, 3.

MR. CULBERTSON [Dealer].
S—A, Q, 10, 7, 6, 5.
H—A, 7, 5, 4.
D—3, 2.
C—4.

Mr. Culbertson, south, opened the auction with one spade. Mrs. Todhunter, west, said two clubs; Mr. Leibenderfer, north, two spades; Mr. Shepard, east, three clubs. Mr. Culbertson, south, went to three spades, which held the bid.

Opening the play Mrs. Todhunter, west, led the king of clubs, to which Mr Culbertson played the 5 from north, the dummy hand. Mr. Shepard, east, played the 3, and declarer the 4 from closed hand. Mr. Shepard played his lowest club as a discouragement card; he felt it might be better for Mrs. Todhunter to switch her suit. It was evident to Mr. Shepard that declarer had an abundance of trumps, so forcing could not injure his hand, and Mr. Shepard was quite sure that declarer would ruff a second club. Mr. Shepard would have been perfectly suited by a diamond lead from his partner; or a heart was not liable to be seriously harmful.

Switches Lead.

Influenced by her partner's discouraging play of the trey of clubs, Mrs. Todhunter led her singleton heart to trick two, hoping that Mr. Shepard had the ace and queen, or at least the ace, to give her one ruff. Declarer, after studying the situation, played the king of hearts from dummy. East played the deuce. He appreciated that his partner's lead probably was a singleton, and it seemed best to him to keep his queen-jack-8 together over dummy's 10-9-6 rather than to start a signal by playing the 8. Declarer played the 4.

To trick three declarer led dummy's 9 of spades, east followed with the 8, declarer with the 7, and west with the trey. Declared continued from dummy with the deuce of spades, east dropped the king, declarer played the ace, and west the 4, the last adverse spade. Mr. Culbertson next led the deuce of diamonds from the south hand; west played the 4, dummy the 10, and Mr. Shepard, east, won with the king of diamonds—a false card. the object being to induce declared to finesse again in that suit.

To trick six Mr. Shepard led the 8 of clubs, his partner's suit. Declarer ruffed with the 10 of spades, West played the deuce and dummy the 6. Declarer then led the trey of diamonds, west played the 5, dummy the ace, and east the 9. Declarer continued diamonds with dummy's jack; east played the queen; declarer ruffed with the queen of spades; and west played the 6 of diamonds. Declarer, at trick nine, led the 5 of spades from closed hand to put dummy in the lead; west discarded the 7 of diamonds; dummy played the jack of spades; and east discarded the 9 of clubs.

A Subtle Play.

Declarer next led from dummy the 7 of clubs; east played the queen; declarer trumped with the 6 of spades; and west played the 10 of clubs. Declarer had developed the hand as he planned to do from the moment the trey of hearts was led by Mrs. Todhunter. Mr. Culbertson was certain the trey was a singleton and therefore Mr. Shepard, in the east, must have held four hearts originally, and after the first heart trick must have been left with the queen-jack-8. Declarer had to take three heart tricks to make his game. He could do this only by the subtle play he developed.

To trick eleven he led the 5 of hearts from closed hand. Mrs. Todhunter, west, discarded the 8 of diamonds; dummy played the 9 of hearts; and Mr. Shepard, east, won with the jack. Mr. Shepard then had nothing to lead but a heart, and it was immaterial whether he led the queen or the 8. In either event Mr. Culbertson would take the remaining two tricks. If he led the queen, south's ace would win that trick, and dummy's 10 the next. If the 8 were led, dummy's 10 would win and declarer's ace would take the final trick. Declarer therefore won four-odd, scoring 36 points, game, with 40 honors. At progressive or duplicate, there would have been an additional 125 points for game in one deal.

Work Praises Play.

In his analysis of the play, Mr. Work said: "It is rarely that we see a hand developed as brilliantly as the one just played. When Mrs. Todhunter led a heart to trick two, Mr. Culbertson could mark that lead as a singleton and place Mr. Shepard's hearts. He had lost one club trick and knew he must lose one diamond. Therefore to make game his spade finesse must succeed and he must develop the hearts so as to lose only one trick in that suit. If north should play the 6 of hearts on this trick, Mr. Shepard could play the 8 spot, force the ace, and have the queen-jack in reserve. If north should play the 9, east could play the jack, and have the queen-8-3 over north's king-10-6. To win this trick in the north hand was essential in order to finesse the trumps; and unless his trump finesse won, declarer could not make game.

"After north won the third trick with the 9 of trumps, he boldly led the deuce to the next trick, hoping and expecting that the king would drop and that his jack of spades would be an entry. It turned out that way [Mr. Shepard's 8 had not been a false card,, and the rest of the play developed easily, declarer being able to exhaust Mr. Shepard's diamonds and clubs so as to force him to lead a heart at trick twelve."

Hold Everything

lar to somebody about this paragraph from the adventures of a golf editor—Howard Barry, this time—roaming through Europe in the winter time? "I got into Paris," he writes, "not even knowing a potage from an oeuf, for the last recollections of my college French had gone glimmering long ago. A menu was thrust before me and after a consultation—I speaking mongrel English and the waiter Parisian French—we clicked. I sat back to await the soup and a long interval elapsed. Then, with an appropriate gesture, the garcon produced before me an enormous sausage flanked by eggs—and I despise both. But I was afraid that if we went into the matter further he would bring me snails, so I downed the dish as best I could."

Names and places are taboo. But in a certain quiet restaurant on the near north side, regular diners have noted an aging man who, each night for more than ten years, has occupied a private room for a solitary dinner at a table intended for ten. He arrives on the minute with his newspapers, dines on a full course meal, and consumes one bottle of champagne—the only liquor, by the way, served in the place. Restaurant attachés preserve a discreet silence as to his identity, which is understandable when one computes the cost of his weekly fare—with champagne quoted [so they say] at $12 the bottle.

The conversation got on coincidences and Frank Cipriani produced this one from his own experience. "After midnight one night, in a dubious southwest side neighborhood, I noted from a street car window a man lying in the street, desperately injured. The crew of the trolley, which hadn't hit him, refused to help him for fear they'd be held responsible. I flagged one taxi after another, but they wouldn't stop. Finally, one came along with three ladies in it. To a plea for help, they agreed at once to give up the conveyance, despite the hour and the district. One of them walked over to look at the man, and fainted. It was her brother."

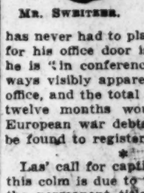
"They can't say anything against him—his life's as open as Bob Sweitzer's office door," grinned a waggish politician in the county building, last week. The simile was apt enough. During his twenty years in office County Clerk Sweitzer is one official the public has never had to play peek-a-boo with, for his office door is never closed. If he is "in conference," the fact is always visibly apparent from the outer office, and the total of his callers each twelve months would look like the European war debts if a ticker could be found to register them all.



MR. SWEITZER.

Las' call for caption votes! Sunday this colm is due to toss to the breezes the permanent title its readers have been knitting their brows over these several weeks. Candidly, we're as close to buck agues ever announcing the result as the veriest judge at a baby show. So many perfectly corking names have been submitted, but only one can win.

Here, by present voting, are the most likely nominees, though not in the order of popularity: "Tips On Tap," "We Ken," "Shorts," "Chin Chin," "Seven Days' Leave," "This and That," and "Potpourri." One good thing about it is that the leader to date has a wide margin of votes, so some at least are sure to be pleased. Ballots are due pronto if they're going to count!

Today's bright idea comes from Mrs. N. C. Mitchell of Oak Park, but was almost nosed out by Thomas Quinn Beeseley, who took time off from penning novels about Chicago gangdom to suggest "So This Is Chicago." Local folks did themselves proud, too, as witness "Gathered 'Round," from Clara A. Bottum; "Heads Up," from Mary Ann McTavish; "Chaff-Ettes," from Mrs. F. W. Quayle; "K.'s Column," from Mrs. Fred Elliott, and "Wimminettes," from Shamus O'Slattery [French, by gum!].

Then there was "Today's Gossip," by J. W. Wenge of Oak Park; "Snapshots," by George Edward Lind; "What-Not" [twice], by Dora H. Smith of Evanston and Mrs. E. C. Vrabeck of Austin; "This and That" [again], by Mrs. Frank Ziboid; "Says Me," by A. R. Parker; "Do Tell," by Esther M. Hannan; "Bits About 'Em," by Josephine Barron, and "Scoopies," by Frances Alice Ward of Evanston.

Jerry Matthews shares "Say, Listen" with Mrs. B. Beard of Kalamazoo, Mich.; "Ink Spots" comes from Mrs. Ed Verrette of Iron Mountain, same state; "Garnered Gab" from Mrs. C. L. Gottschalk of Quincy, Mich. Frances Brown of Columbus, O., offers "Tittle Tattle Tales"; Margaret Rasmussen of Marion, Ia., "Blasts from the Ram's Horn" [don't know why]; Mrs. Adrian Story of La Salle, Ill., "Personalagrams"; Stella Kanady of Ridgway, Ill., "Shore Line," [werry nice]; Dorothy Barker of Springfield tries again with "Pertinent Peeps"; Mrs. E. J. Kravik of Stoughton, Wis., likes "Tribiets"; Mrs. E. L. L. R. Wertheimer of Ligonier, Ind., "V-Yous," pronounced "Views"; M. G. at Elkhart, "Excerpts," and Corinne Conard of Kendallville, Hoosier state, "Keeping Tab."

We're waiting for the verdict.

cuffs of scalloped twill that tie in knots at the back.

The dress, shown on the small figure, is made of brown and eggshell printed crêpe, with bias bands of the material around the hipli e in front descending in back into a plaited panel that's tiered, giving all the fullness to the back. Ties at the back of the waistline further emphasize this back movement. The collar is lace and the cuff ties are lace edged.

Furless Coats for Spring.

The newest thing in furless coats for spring is the Bruyere coat shown in our third sketch. It is made of a spongy woolen with a ma surface in flag blue, and the folded collar and big cuffs are of the wool with eyelet embroidery squares for trimming. The coat is a redingote [or coachman] cut and fastens under two large buttons at the left side.

It is worn with a light gray georgette dress, another safe and sane color contrast, shown in the small sketch. This dress buttons from waistline to square neck with blue buttons. The belt ends in a tailored bow, and there is a flaring all around peplum and two side peplums below. The sleeves are flared at the elbows by half tucked bands.

Maggy Rouff makes the springtime ensemble shown second in the old reliable black and white color contrast, and lets the thrill in by employing jacquard [embossed] print silk in tiny pattern and all in one color. The coat is cut just like a long tunic blouse, and therein lies much of its cachet. It ties at the standing collar—right side—and at the waistline—left side, with rabbit-ear bow, half black half white. The sleeves are exaggerated bishop.

The dress, shown in the background, has a dropped shoulder yoke of white jacquard crêpe that makes the puffs at the sleeve tops and the draped front. The dress is shirred at the waistline under a band, coming up from and in one piece with the skirt. The lower sleeve is also fitted into the wrist by bands and shirring.

Evening Pajamas.

Cast your eyes now upon the fourth sketch and behold the newest and most striking evening pajamas from Paris to date. Suzanne Talbot designs these and out of printed crêpe in two colors, gold and brown. There is a modest sleeveless jacket of the brown with gold crêpe, and the superwide trousers are made of the same crêpe. The blouse, which is all front and little or no back, is made of gold with brown crêpe, buttoning under six gold buttons at the back, and held up in front by a necklace of crêpe around the neck. The evening hat is of brown velvet with a veil brim of starched lace and a gold brick band around the base of the velvet crown.

Contrasts of modesty and daring are also in the new mode.

Bright Sayings

Please address all bright sayings of children to Aunty Bee, The Tribune.

On the approach of the fifth birthday of my younger sister we began asking her what she would want. Of course the substance of her replies were the usual run of the child of that age, a doll, toy bed, toy stove, clothes, etc. Harriet, however, conveyed the impression that anything in a box would satisfy her.

I kiddingly asked her whether a kiss would do. She wisely shook her head and quickly replied, "O, no, that's not anything in a box."

Stubborn Coughs Ended by Recipe, Mixed at Home

Here is the famous old recipe which millions of housewives have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up a stubborn, lingering cough. It takes but a moment to prepare and costs little, but it gives real relief even for those dreaded coughs that follow severe cold epidemics.

From any druggist, get 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. Thus you make a full pint of better remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times the cost. It never spoils and tastes as good that even children like it.

Not only does this simple mixture soothe and heal the inflamed throat membranes with surprising ease, but also it is absorbed into the blood, and acts directly upon the bronchial tubes, thus aiding the whole system in throwing off the cough. It loosens the germ-laden phlegm and eases chest soreness in a way that is really astonishing.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form. Nothing known in medicine is more helpful in cases of distressing coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles.

Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

The SIGN of the NARCISSUS

by HENRY C. ROWLAND

The Story So Far:

Narcissa Vandersee's father is a wealthy contractor with an estate at Peekskill on the Hudson. She notices a plane flying twice daily over the estate, and learns that the pilot is John Flint, Princeton graduate, who runs an air taxi for Tammany politicians between Manhattan and Albany. She has the gardener design an enormous narcissus. The pilot sees the flower and comes down to pay his respects. He tells Narcissa he is planning to start a tourist air service between Miami and the Bahamas. On her twenty-first birthday Narcissa takes her father's old yacht for a trip to the Bahamas, with Capt. Hank Broek as navigator and Greta Tietjens as companion-secretary. There she makes a garden that from the air looks like a huge bouquet. In flying over Narcissa's island John is disturbed by seeing no sign of her or her party. Fearful of tragedy, he plans a scouting trip. Narcissa's small boat has capsized in a squall, and she has been rescued by Langdon Stelle. The two are marooned on Langdon's island.

INSTALLMENT VI.

Classmates.

NARCISSA had brought ashore the oil stove and presently interrupted her salvage operations to heat some soup and make some coffee. From the reviving effect of this on Langdon, Narcissa decided that about two-thirds of his present helplessness was due to lack of nourishment. She reflected that a man in his state of mind might actually forget to eat or neglect the fortifying of the system when preoccupied by some urgent task, whether of a professional sort or merely running his boat. Sometimes in a weakened constitution the demands of hunger do not manifest themselves or may actually take the form of repugnance to food, but the hot soup and coffee and biscuits now revived him wonderfully. He looked at Narcissa with a shame-faced smile.

"You must think me an awful dub and slacker and all the rest," he said.

"I think," she answered, "that you are mortally in need of a nurse and that the providence that looks after some of us let you haul one out of the sea."

He looked at the boat. "She can't last much longer there. Her bottom must have been pretty soft to have punched through like that."

"Wormed, probably," Narcissa said. "Perhaps it's a blessing in disguise. But the disguise is good."

"We'd better take off her sails and running rigging. Once the trade wind starts to blow she's going to break up fast."

They stripped the boat of everything detachable, and finished this work none too soon. Narcissa suggested rigging a tent with the mainsail. Langdon was of the opinion that one of the grottoes in the low cliffs might prove more habitable. They went on a tour of inspection.

"House hunting—or apartment hunting," Narcissa said. "At any rate the rents are low. What about the local provision markets?"

"Not so bad. Plenty of shore food. Fish and crabs and things. Then we've got goat's milk and my chickens are laying and there are lots of rabbits. I brought the live stock when I came here."

"How did you happen to hit on this little cay?"

"I cruised round here one summer vacation when in college, and I said to myself then that if things ever went wrong with me I'd haul away and come down here and turn hermit for a while." He looked at her intently. "Have you ever been in love?"

Narcissa nodded her bright head. "I am now. With a man named John Flint."

He gave her a startled look. "The flyer?"

"Yes."

"We were classmates in college," Langdon said. "He's the sort of chap I'd like to be—but never can. Most of my trouble is that I'm so crazy in love with my wife. When Drusilla got fed up with me——" he checked himself. "That's not the word for it, though. Underfed with me would be more exact."

"Underfed with what?" Narcissa asked.

"Call it lack of success—getting nowhere. I disappointed her, disillusioned her. O, I was lover enough and we had money enough, but she had counted on my doing something big, and being dependable and reliable, with steady habits and a cheerful disposition. I got morose and flighty—and then I began to drink. She couldn't stand that."

"Nobody can, Langdon—especially in the sort of temperamental man you seem to be. I suppose you had bitter fights."

A Musical Freak

He nodded. "Terrible. She was temperamental, too. I was always perverse. It's often puzzled me why I should have said and done the things precisely opposite to what I wanted to say and do."

"How long since you have drunk anything?" Narcissa asked.

"Since our final quarrel. Drusilla said she'd had enough and cleared out. She took an office job."

"And you love her as much as ever?"

"More." The tears gushed into his eyes. "I've never loved or even wanted any woman but Drusilla, and never shall. When I get insomnia I go through hell just in thinking of what I've lost. Nobody who has never suffered it can imagine what it's like."

"I think I can, Langdon."

"No, you may love John Flint an awful lot, and he loves you, of course. This may seem hard, but after all you are only separated geographically. I'm separated from Drusilla by the gulf between heaven and hell."

He changed the topic abruptly. "John Flint helped me a lot my freshman year. I was considered sort of a musical freak. He was the kind that men cluster round because he was so sure of himself and didn't give a hang about prominence or popularity, so that both were hung on him."

"How did he help you?"

"I roomed alone and even then was trying to write music. That cut my time for study. I could always catch up, but it left me nervous and sleepless. I'd get panicky and John would iron me out."

"How?"

"O, just stand by. Sometimes he'd sleep all night on my couch. He seemed to understand and he liked to hear me play."

"Piano?"

"Yes, and violin." He nodded at a canvas sea-bag. "It's in there. I've never had it out."

"Did John know your wife?"

"Yes, when we were first married. She used to wish that I was like him. Then he went to California."

They were seated by their salvaged property, having returned from an inspection of the grottoes. Narcissa now agreed with Langdon that a couple of these would make better lodging than any tent, more roomy, cooler in the daytime, wind and rainproof, and there was one that had a little spring of sweet water trickling from a crevice to form a little pool.

"I tried sleeping here," Langdon said, "but it was too suggestive of a tomb. There's a sort of living quality about a boat. You can seem to feel it breathe."

"Yes, I've noticed that. Even on a still night it has soothing little murmurings and whisperings. Perhaps you'd better rig yourself a tent."

"No, I think I'll be all right now that you're here. I think I've been suffering from solitude without knowing it."

"Yes. One can crave solitude and suffer from it, just as one can crave a crowd and suffer from that."

They ferried the stores along the shores to the grotto in the skiff until a rising swell made landing too difficult.

"We mustn't smash the skiff," Langdon said. "If the worst comes to the worst, we can always get away from here with her."

Narcissa looked at the little craft and shook her head. It was ten feet long, broad of beam, but low sided and very lightly built, half-inch white pine. One person was a cargo for it and two an overload.

"Better stick it out here than take a chance with that. These shoals are worse than open sea, all breaking water. Let's not interfere with destiny."

"Destiny?"

"Yes. I've a feeling that there's more here than we know. You picked me up just as I was drowning. And now I relieve the solitude that might have driven you mad."

He nodded. "I was dreading coming back here this time. I'd sworn to myself to stick it out a full year, come what might of it, and determined that for once in my life I'd stick to a resolution."

"There's another coincidence about us," Narcissa went on. "You tell me you'd just finished a symphony and sent it to your agent just before you bolted off and have no idea whether it has come to anything or not. I've done the same thing in a different way."

Unable to Keep Still

She told him about Miraflores cay. Langdon listened absorbed. Before he could express himself, Narcissa went on. "Then we've still another point in common. Your wife was all tired and discouraged with you and my father felt the same way about me. We haven't, either of us, the slightest idea if our efforts are going to make a change in their feelings about us or not. And there's still one more point. I was nervously exhausted and getting so I couldn't sleep or even rest or read or sit still. That's why I took a chance and got swamped. If I'd been my normal self I'd never have risked going so far off shore in that little dinghy."

"It does look as if there was some reason back of it," Langdon admitted.

"Sometimes the blind do lead the blind," Narcissa said. "The fact that you are in love with your wife and I'm in love with John Flint leaves only one reason for all this."

"What?"

"Well, a sort of warning to hold just to what you love best, and take no chances on losing it. People that love each other and know it ought not to separate even if their inclinations clash. Any sacrifice is better than letting go of what you love."

"But how does that apply to you?"

"I told John that he must not try to see me again until my work was finished and his air service inaugurated. It seemed to me that I mustn't be distracted. That gave me six months. I held off my father, too. It would really have been better if I'd broken the routine and seen them both."

Langdon nodded. "The trouble with us artists is in silly sacrifice of everything to art."

"I see that now," Narcissa agreed. "One's art is important, but never so important as one's love, when that is real."

"You're right. Too many artists have discovered that great truth too late. I thought I was pure artist, but I've discovered that I was pure fool. A good deal of a coward, too."

There was such a stab of bitterness in his voice that Narcissa said: "You're wrong about the last. It took great courage to do what you've done and stick to it—to say I'm going to cure myself or die in the attempt—and then come near dying—or worse."

"Going mad first," he muttered.

Narcissa rose. "Well, let's face reality from now on," she said. "Let's be normal. I'll start supper."

"I'll go see if there are some eggs," Langdon said. "I built a shelter for my chickens. There are plenty of rabbits, but I can never bear to kill one."

"Don't. Let's try to live and let live. When we both get rested we'll begin to think about getting back to where be belong—physically, I mean."

The day was waning when they finished their supper. Then as the shadows of the low cliffs stretched far out across the smooth topaz sea, for the trade wind had died away, Narcissa noticed a growing restlessness in her fellow castaway, for the loss of the sloop had made them that. He seemed unable to keep still, to talk quietly and composedly as they had done that afternoon.

"What's the matter, Langdon?" she asked. It seemed now to Narcissa as if she had known him all her life. For such is the power of sympathy and mutual understanding.

He said apologetically, "I always get this way toward dark. A sort of dread of the night. To coin a word, it's a nocturnephobia."

"You're going to sleep," she said. "Insomnia has got your nerve."

"That's true."

"Why not break out your violin and play something?"

He looked at her doubtfully. "Do you think that would help? I've always been afraid to try."

"It is different now that I'm here."

"Yes. Everything is different now that you are here. But to play——"

"Well, not tonight, perhaps. Wait until we're both rested a little more."

"It scares me to wake up in the night," he said frankly. "At first I was too low to care much. But as I got stronger it seemed to be actually worse. The loneliness that I first craved began to grip me."

"You don't need to be lonely now," Narcissa said. "If you wake, you'll know that I'm close by."

"Yes. That's going to help a lot. It's awful to wake suddenly, all tense with the terrible fear of cracking up. Not merely dying, but being totally obliterated and at the same time being conscious of it. Like a thought that is yourself drifting in a black void."

"Langdon, have you ever tried asking for divine help?"

"O, yes," he answered wearily, "I've tried prayer, but my ideas of God have always been too vague."

"God," said Narcissa, "is the Great Thought that thinks back at you."

"That's an idea. Something that keeps you from being ever absolutely alone. I may come to that later, but just now you're a lot more real. I'll hang on to the knowledge that you are close by."

They had brought most of the boat's equipment into the larger grotto, but Langdon had carried one of the berth mattresses and a blanket into a smaller cavern, made by centuries of erosion, close by.

He now rose abruptly and said good night and disappeared round a buttress of the rock. There was for Narcissa something pitiful in this sudden resolution, and the wearied droop of his shoulders. If she had been a mother it would have reminded her of a tired little boy who was afraid of the dark forcing himself to march off to bed alone in the wing of a gloomy house. Even as it was she felt an impulse to go with him, to see him safely to bed.

But it would be easier for him now. She wondered how he had been able to support the isolation, the desolation of the past three dreadful months. Narcissa remembered a saying to the effect that a man must be either saint or devil to live alone and Langdon Stelle was neither. He was, she thought, sheer artist, and it seemed to her that such an individual would be the very last to endure a solitude so absolute. He lacked even the support of a religious sense.

This last she herself possessed strongly, through instinct rather than orthodoxy. It had helped her through many an access of solitude of soul, the lack of being even partially understood by her father, her friends or relatives.

It helped her now as she drew on the soft dressing gown Langdon had insisted on her keeping, and lay down on the pallet mattress and stretched her tired limbs and let her mind reach out to the Great Universal Thought that thinks benignly back at you.

Enormous Publicity

The grayness of soul that had settled on John Flint after the first shock was of a sort that kills only a part of a strong man, while the rest of him lives on and functions and strives in a concentrated way that leads frequently to great success.

So it was with John Flint. Having no further interest in anything at all, he focused his thought on his new company, not much caring whether it thrived or pined away. It thrived, and in the same indifferent but concentrated way John Flint started new forces in motion for the inauguration of new routes.

After that first week of hopeless searching in which swarms of craft, both of sea and air, engaged, Narcissa's loss was regarded as final. In fact, the finding of the dinghy awash with seams sprung wide, drifting far from any land, had made the search no more than perfunctory, a tribute and formality. As the course of the squall was known, the examination of the sea and scattered islands was carried on to leeward, and nobody had thought of visiting a tiny outlying island fifty miles to windward. In fact, the search was for Narcissa's body rather than for her living person. It was reasoned that if she had been picked up, an unlikely event, she would have been soon landed, and no missing boat had been reported.

The tragedy coming immediately on the exploitation of Narcissa's achievement with all that it signified naturally gave enormous publicity to Miraflores cay. Crowds clamored to see it. Flint's company put on extra planes and pilots, but he himself could not bear to fly over what was now Narcissa's memorial out there in the sea.

The Vandersee Construction company received also its full quota of publicity and, though Cornelius felt crushed in spirit, his business was still too deeply the warp and woof of him to let this chance of holding a new position of prominence pass untaken. Cornelius put Peter Maas in as general superintendent and Peter, despite a grief that was perfectly sincere, played up the slogan of "Building for the Air." They captured the European exposition contract and proceeded along the lines of a bird's-eye view of grounds and buildings.

No one but Miss Tietjens knew of the blow dealt to stanch Capt. Broek in the loss of his beloved charge. It might indeed have been a death blow but for her sympathy and insistence that the fault was fully hers, that knowing of Narcissa's restless, nervous state, she accused herself of a criminal negligence in not keeping the girl constantly under observation. Actually she had kept her under observation and at the first sound of the outboard motor she had run out and tried to hail Narcissa, to call her back. But the girl, buried in her thoughts and looking steadfastly ahead, had neither seen nor heard her until the cay was far astern, when she ignored the white speck that was a woman in an agony of anxiety.

ILLUSTRATION BY W. H. WISNER.

"I made a fearful mess of my life and of Langdon's, John."

In an Unknown Sea?

As the weeks, then the months dragged past, John Flint was aware of a change in his previous indifferent attitude toward the idea of immortality. In his busy mental life he had never given much thought to a future one. He was neither believer nor infidel. Not even agnostic. He had merely never given any thought at all to religion or to metaphysics. But now at intervals he was aware of brief transient moments of startling rapport with Narcissa. He could not have described the character of these flashes even to himself, except to say that when they came he felt her close and living presence, as if she were calling to him soundlessly from an adjoining room.

He mentioned this one day to a scientific friend, who immediately explained it biologically, because this friend happened to be a distinguished biologist. The analysis did not satisfy John Flint, though he felt obliged to accept it in dearth of any other. Had he consulted a psychologist, a metaphysician, he might have come much nearer to the truth.

One day he saw in a paper the review of a new symphony that had been given for the first time by a leading philharmonic orchestra. Flint was glad to learn that his former college mate and friend, Langdon Stelle, had stepped suddenly into the spotlight of acclaim. The column was written by a distinguished musical critic who had the reputation of being almost impossible to please, a man whose accepted judgment was as well known as his pessimistic attitude toward modern musical composers, especially his American compatriots.

John Flint was himself a music lover and he went, albeit a little listlessly, to a second performance of the symphony. In these gray days of his soul nothing had the power to stir him. But he came from the hall deeply moved. The critic, he decided, and others who indorsed his finding, were right. Any man who could produce such a masterpiece as this was a great musician, was entitled to his seat in the Hall of Fame, even if he were never to write anything again.

And then in another review in the Sunday newspaper John Flint was shocked to learn that in all probability Langdon Stelle never would write anything again, for the simple reason that six months before, just after finishing this opus, he had disappeared from the world's ken while suffering a severe nervous breakdown. His wife had subsequently offered the work, though in no great hope of its acceptance or subsequent success.

Through the musical publishers Flint learned Drusilla Stelle's address, which he found to be a little apartment far uptown in New York. He might not have troubled to make his call but for the fact that the newspaper account had compared the case of Stelle with that of Narcissa Vandersee. It called attention to the tragic disappearance of a girl genius and one scarcely more than a boy just after the completion of brilliant achievement and before either had known of the world's praise and seal of success.

Here, observed the commentator, were a young artist and a young musician who had toiled unceasingly and to the point of nerves overwrought, and, their work finished, vanished in a mare incognita without trace. The hyperbole struck John Flint. He remembered Langdon Stelle's love of boats and the sea, and wondered if in this connection his disappearance, like that of Narcissa, might be taken literally as into an "unknown sea."

Drusilla was in when he called, having, she told him, just returned from the business office where she was employed as secretary. She was young and very pretty, in type not entirely unlike Narcissa, though less blonde and with less gentle an expression.

Her face was firm, beginning to take on that stamp of efficiency to be seen in the capable business woman, and her gray eyes were, John thought, a little hard.

But he discovered instantly that this hardness was introspective, directed against herself.

"I made a fearful mess of my life and of Langdon's, John," she told him. "I never did have any tolerance for what is called the artistic temperament. I was never enough of a musician to have much faith in Langdon's talent."

"The critics call it genius," Flint said.

"Well, I suppose they ought to know. I never believed in that, either, except as a freakish sort of thing that almost never occurs."

Flint told her then about his love for Narcissa and their plans for the future. Drusilla listened attentively.

"How simply terrible, John. But at least you two never quarreled. You're spared self-reproach."

"Did you love Langdon very much?" John asked with no great tact.

"Yes"—the tears filled her eyes. "Though I didn't know how much until too late. I got discouraged about him and impatient with what seemed his futility. It got so that I couldn't stand the sound of his piano or violin. We had some bitter quarrels. You know what he was like when his nerves were all on edge."

"Yes. He used to get pretty wild."

"You've no idea how wild. Then he got to drinking. And that made him temporarily insane. He couldn't sleep and that kept me from sleeping. And then we'd have a dreadful time of it. I can see now that I was a lot to blame."

"How?" Flint wondered how much this admission might be due to Langdon's posthumous success and if Drusilla would have felt the same way about it if the symphony had never been accepted.

"In lack of understanding. You know Langdon hated interruption in his work and he detested social events, teas, dinners, and things. The domestic machinery would first irritate, then drive him wild; the door bell and telephone and people dropping in. He used to make me angry, too, by refusing to play when I had a little party."

Flint nodded. He was aware of his college mate's moodiness. Drusilla went on:

"Things went really wrong when I insisted in having a separate room. He began to have insomnia. He had a childish dread of being alone in the dark when his nerves got ragged. First I wanted him to consult a specialist and later when he seemed to be going all to pieces to go to a sanatorium. He said he'd rather go to jail. Things went from bad to worse——" she hesitated.

"What?" Flint asked.

"I left him. I told him I couldn't stand him any longer, and if he were going to be so stubborn he'd simply have to fight it out alone the best he could. Well, perhaps he has."

Flint gave her a quick, sharp look—"You don't believe he's dead?"

Drusilla shook her head.

"Why not?"

"I rather hate to tell you, John. We're neither of us visionary."

"I'm no longer quite so sure about myself," Flint said.

"How?"

"There are moments when I seem to feel Narcissa close to me. Calling to me."

She gave him a startled look. "You think you hear her voice?"

"Yes, but not with my ears. It lasts only a second or two and it leaves me badly shaken."

Drusilla said earnestly: "If a man of your sort feels that, John, I might as well tell that I feel something very like it myself. But in my case it's more touch than sound."

"Of course," Flint said slowly—"a spiritist would say that it was an effort on the part of the disembodied soul to make its presence felt. But I can't accept that."

"Nor I," Drusilla agreed. "I'm too earthly, too natural. It's a sort of unconscious cerebration."

"That's what my biologist friend told me," Flint said. "But why should it get stronger as time goes on instead of fainter?"

"It's the same with me." Drusilla said eagerly, "but I've got a different theory about it."

"What?"

"That Langdon is alive somewhere, and that what I get is a sort of mental radio."

"A Fearful Mess"

Flint stiffened in his chair. "Good Lord, Drusilla, have you any basis for that?"

"Yes. Before we were married and even afterward he has said at times, 'If ever I should go to smash I'm going down to the Bahamas and get a little boat and turn hermit for a while.' You know he cruised down there one summer when he was in college and loved those waters. He craved solitude from time to time."

Flint's face whitened. "Have you made any effort to trace him down there?"

"Yes. I wrote to our consul at Nassau and asked if he had happened to hear any rumor of a young American, giving Langdon's description, cruising round alone. He had nothing to report at the time, but promised to keep my inquiry in mind. Over three months ago he wrote me that some spongers reported having found a piece of the stern and side planking of a boat floating about off Eleuthera island. They thought it might have been a small yacht. There were the letters S I L on the fragment of the stern."

Flint's face was tense. "Do you think he would have named his boat after you, Drusilla?"

"Langdon loved me, John, even when he was most bitter."

"Do you still love him?"

"I've been pretty bitter myself, but I could never love any other man. Sometimes I've thought I hated him, but I was wrong. I hated the devil that seemed to possess him now and then. Yes, I love him." Her gray eyes lost their hard look, grew misty. "It would be different if we were to get another chance."

Flint said slowly: "Yesterday I decided that I couldn't go on any longer this way. I'm sick of everything."

"What do you want to do?" Drusilla asked.

"It's not a question of what I want to do, but what I don't want to go on doing. I've decided to take my old Yellow Jacket amphib in which I first saw Narcissa and fly over Miraflores cay—where I last saw Narcissa."

"Would that be good for you?"

"I don't know. It's just a sort of urge I've got. There might be something——" he paused.

"Something what?"

"Some sort of a sign—message, token, whatever you may call it. Something not explained by physical science, biology." And he said with sudden heat: "Damn biology!"

Drusilla leaned forward. "John," she said earnestly, "will you do me a great favor?"

"What?"

"Take me with you."

He stared at her doubtfully. "The old crate isn't as good as she was once. I shouldn't care if she flopped into the sea—if I were alone."

"Are you thinking of suicide?"

"O, no. On the contrary, I'd take a desperate chance to get back some interest in life. Danger often helps."

"I feel that way myself," Drusilla said. "I'm sick of the whole futile game. Nothing interests me. You are the first man I've had the least desire even to talk to since I left Langdon. Don't you think there's something strange about our positions being so much alike?"

Flint nodded. "That's what brought me here."

"Well, then, let's call it fate and see what comes of it. I don't care any more than you do if we crash in the sea. That's better than hating oneself and everybody else."

Flint looked at her morosely. He had never been particularly attracted to Drusilla, and it seemed to him now that she had made Langdon a poor sort of wife. If a woman chooses to marry a high strung, temperamental artist, she ought not to walk out on him, Flint thought. Still, when a man like Langdon takes to drink——

He Craved Solitude

"Have you been true to him?" Flint asked with his harsh bluntness.

"Absolutely."

"Well, then, I guess you do love him after all. Perhaps there may be something left for me to do."

"What do you mean?"

"Find Langdon for you. A boat doesn't smash off her stern unless she hits something, and if she hits something a man might climb up on to it. That name might have been Silver Spray or Silver Cloud or it might have been Drusilla. I'm not so sure that I could stand flying over Miraflores cay."

"When can we start, John?"

"Tonight. The Yellow Jacket's at our Palm Beach airport. I'll wire them to give her the once over."

"What's the area of the Bahama archipelago?"

"Call it roughly forty thousand square miles."

"And how many islands?"

"Counting the minor cays, there are hundreds of them, thousands, perhaps. Most of the larger ones have water and are inhabited. And there are a lot that are habitable, but are not inhabited."

"I should think places like that so near the coast would be an ideal refuge for criminals," Drusilla said.

"Criminals hate solitude. They'd rather hide in the slums of a city than in a paradise alone. Still, if you combed the place out you'd be apt to find some bad actors."

"John, have you ever thought of the possibility that Narcissa Vandersee might have been rescued and then held prisoner?"

"I rejected that idea at the start. It was too plain what had happened. The short chop over those shoals smashed the dinghy down on a coral head and opened her up. The engine might have got knocked loose or else Narcissa chucked it overboard to keep the boat from sinking. The wash over the boat overwhelmed her so that——"

His voice seemed to dwindle out. Drusilla, glancing at him, saw that his face was deadly white. He leaned back in his chair.

"I'm sorry, John. I shouldn't have."

He said with a sort of a croak: "It isn't that. It's the other."

Drusilla asked tensely: "One of those spells?"

"Yes, but different. There—it's gone now."

"How is it different?"

"I've felt sometimes that Narcissa was trying to get a message through to me. But what I felt just now is different. As if she were crying for help—the sort of mental S O S. Unconscious cerebration. An involuntary reaction to your suggestion she might be held prisoner."

Drusilla said earnestly: "I'm not so sure. My mind has been getting changed for me lately. Like you, I've always said that this clairvoyant stuff was bunk. Langdon believed in it, but he was the sort that would. Now I'm wondering if there may not be something in it, after all."

A Thousand Islands

Flint looked at her with strained eyes, like a far sighted person trying to focus closely without glasses.

"I've just remembered that once it happened to me and I proved it."

"How?"

"The first time I flew over my proposed route. In the Yellow Jacket. I was up a couple of thousand feet when I felt a sort of tug. I looked down and saw a schooner yacht at anchor off a cay. I had no idea of coming down. But, acting on sheer impulse, I dived on the place and there she was. We'd never even told each other that we cared, then."

"Was what you felt just now like that?"

"No, it wasn't. It was like a nightmare when you can't remember. You put an idea in my head and my brain worked on it subconsciously."

"Yes—that perhaps," Drusilla agreed. "And then again perhaps the very intensity of your thought about Narcissa made you receptive for a second so that you got something."

"You mean that she's not trying to get some message through from beyond, but alive and in danger?"

"If she were beyond," Drusilla said, "she wouldn't be in danger or distress."

"By God, there's something in that. There was never a sweeter, purer soul than hers. But this telepathy thing is all rot." Flint made the statement vehemently.

"Langdon used to argue this way," Drusilla said. "He claimed that two birds that were mated, or seals perhaps, were constantly being separated and joining again when they wished. One day during our honeymoon down on Cape Cod, we watched a pair of gulls that seemed to be mates fly off in different directions into the fog. He said: 'Now if those were humans like ourselves they wouldn't know how to find each other. But because they are mere birds and depend on instinct they've only got to want to get together and instinct guides them.' He went on to say then that there was no sense why the higher form of animals should lack the intuitions of the lower and that it had come about when we began to insist on a reason for every act."

"Well, I don't know," Flint said. "I've never been a hunch player, but perhaps there's something in it, after all. I'm not so sure about that stuff as I used to be." He rose. "I'll find out about the train and phone you."

"Then we're really going to search?"

"Yes. Not only for Langdon, but for Narcissa, even if I have to carry the search into the next world. I may find her there. For once in my life I'm going to play a hunch."

"Then let's play it to the limit," Drusilla said.

"I shall. We'll go through those islands and we'll go heeled. But don't say anything about it."

He gave her a brief nod. "Stand by the phone," he said and went out.

There Comes a Time

By Dorothy Black

Charming Terence, Though Ready to Make His Choice and Settle Down, Found That His Past Had a Way of Keeping Present Plans in the Future.

TERENCE was charming. Every one said so. Even people who did not like him, and there had been many in his own service, over whose heads he had been passed in spite of everything, which never endears a man to the other man and his wife. After they had said how charming he was they would usually add, with a sigh, what a pity it was he was not more respectable.

Terence was not very respectable. He had done things of all kinds. There was a little affair in the Punjab. An unfortunate episode in the U. P. Also a little business he did not mention in Burma. Commissions had sat quite often on Terence and his doings, and found him wanting, but so charming that nothing ever came of it but a half hearted reprimand. A man can stand unlimited reprimands out east. He files them under miscellaneous, and calls for a cold drink.

He had thought when he retired to get away from it all. He had imagined when he bought Markhams, Little Pottlesford, and put his mind to growing lupins that the old days and the old follies and rashnesses would be forgotten. That disreputable fellow whose exploits came back to him like pictures whenever he had a moment's leisure seemed to have little more to do with him than a regrettable elder brother who had been conveniently put away. There comes a time when a man outgrows his mistakes and rashnesses.

The fact that his other name was Smith also helped him, for with a Smith no one can be quite sure this is the one he is thinking about and not another.

Terence meant to marry and settle down if he could find the right girl, and he found Maisie. Maisie was a nice girl. All men loved her, and Terence through one long summer was no exception to the rule. He followed her from Harrogate to Scotland and then back to England with entire disregard of any plans of his own. It was obvious that she liked him. He began to dream such pretty dreams in which he saw her walking beside him through his garden at Markhams admiring the lupins. He was passionately fond of lupins. He cultivated them by the bedful.

Everything was going beautifully and he had made up his mind to bring his past to Maisie and ask her to forgive it and marry him when Ida MacMasters turned up. Turned up with real crocodile luggage and a Paris hat. In Simla they called her the Human Tiger because of a certain determination with which she stalked her object and always wore it down at last and got what she wanted.

Undone by Gossip

"Terence," she said. "You!"

She seemed delighted, but he was suddenly frightened. He tried to get Maisie out into the garden after dinner and tell her all about himself in his own way before she had it in the unexpurgated version from the Human Tiger. But they were engulfed in a game of bridge. Ida MacMasters was not one who could be shaken off at will. At bedtime she and Maisie went upstairs arm in arm, having struck up a great friendship. He saw her go into Maisie's room for one of those long, intimate bedtime chats beloved of women. He could not compete. He knew he was undone. He could picture her saying it. "Don't you know. O, yes, dear. The Terence Smith . . . Lots of people were pretty down on him, you know, in India."

He paced the hotel garden. Women like Ida MacMasters were a menace to society. They had too much money and too much leisure, and too much vitality, and nothing whatever to do with it all. After a certain age they should be taken over by the state and have their energies absorbed in useful channels.

One glance at Maisie's face the following morning and he knew the thing was finished. The Human Tiger had laid her remarks well and truly. Maisie gave him her hand and looked at him sadly and said a few trenchant things about respectability and keeping up standards, and went away. The following spring she married a retired colonel in Le Touquet. Terence got a little comfort out of the news, for he felt after all he could not have been really happy with a woman who had no sense of humor.

From that time on Ida MacMasters dogged him. Wherever he went there inevitably did she turn up. Always with a charming "Terence! You again!" Always so pleased to see him. She stayed at the same hotel in Ascot. He went to the Chessington's house party, and there was she, also. He doubled on his tracks, hid for a week in London, and then slid secretly to Cowes, but it was no good. Within three days there she was, with her crocodile luggage, her Paris hat. Sometimes in the dead of night he half wondered if it was just chance, and grew cold in the wondering. Was it possible that Ida MacMasters was blackmailing him for some long forgotten omission of etiquette? Had he failed to dance with her when he should have danced with her? Had he not paid sufficient court to her in days gone by? She was the sort of woman to devote time and leisure to the paying off of some imaginary slight.

More than once he was inclined to go right up and ask her what the idea was. But she always looked so genial, so friendly, when they met. She asked him to dine, to dance, to yacht. He would have gone back to Markhams, if the painters had not been in. He never could abide the smell of paint.

He hid. He breakfasted earlier than she did, and went out. He found a secluded beach, and took sandwiches there, and so it was he came to remember again the ancient fun of lunching out of doors. It was a pleasant secret beach, reached by a narrow path between gorse bushes. He began to think it was his alone, and was about to undress without bothering to look for a rock, and bathe, when he heard a shout, and three of the largest children he had ever set eyes on burst through the gorse bushes and came gamboling across the sand. If the boys had not worn gray flannel shorts and cricket shirts—and if the girl had not had two long fair plaits, he would have thought they were grown up. He could only suppose they were the young of some giant, and looked with interest to see who accompanied them.

Eyes Like Lupins

It was nothing but a slip of a girl, with a wide brimmed hat. She came along slowly, chewing a piece of grass. As she passed him, she raised her eyes and gave him a look. Such blue eyes she had. They reminded him very pleasantly of his lupins at home. She was having a moment's peace when he first saw her, but it did not last long, for the three large children soon beset her again. It was plain that she was the governess, and to Terence it seemed cruel that any one so small and slender should be left in entire and exhausting charge of the young of giants. How they plagued her. It was plain that she did not want to bathe. He heard her saying, "Not today. Honestly, I don't want to." It made no difference. They bore her off behind the rocks. Perhaps they undressed her there by force. Anyhow, there she was, ridiculously small in a tight fitting black rubber cap, hugging herself, and shivering, while all around her they gamboled like sea lions. Great wet shining legs and arms. When one of the boys came up behind her and sunk her it was all Terence could do not to rush in. It made his blood boil when she came up spluttering, saying, "O, please, Stowell, dear."

Chivalry was dying out altogether During the next few days Terence found himself thinking quite a lot about chivalry, for it became plainer and plainer that they treated her with none. They came every day, so he had lots of time for observing her. She was so gentle and so sweet. No doubt her employer bullied her just as much as the children did. He pictured the sort of home that would raise revolting children of that sort.

Their introduction was a cricket ball. They usually played cricket after tea. He heard them yelling to her to run or to stop sending sneaks—bawling at her to throw harder, screaming with laughter at her efforts to bowl overarm. It was heart breaking to watch her try and bowl legbreaks. It was so obviously a waste of time. He was thinking as much, when the longer of the two boys sent a boundary off her pitiful bowling, right to his feet.

What could he do but field it? After that he found himself an involuntary long-stop, promoted thence to wicket keeper, and in the end she said, smiling at him from under the wide brim of her hat:

"If you are going to play, for goodness sake bowl. I can't get her out."

He went to the wicket with a confidence he was far from feeling. It was a long time since he had bowled. He hated to remember how long.

Terence often suspected himself of disliking adolescent girls. He no longer had any doubts as this one took boundary after boundary from him, her fat bare legs flying, golden brown with sunburn, her long plaits swinging as she ran. Tonk, tonk. No one would have imagined he had once captained the school eleven. He could not get the little pest out. He dripped at the brow and began to puff. He saw himself bowling on and on, until darkness fell.

"I say, Winks, you must retire at a century." One of the boys flung himself down on the sand. The girl threw her hat aside. Was it possible she had made a hundred? Apparently, for the game was at an end.

"Frightfully good of you to play with us, sir."

"Those leg breaks of yours will be jolly hard to take when you've had more practice, sir."

Charming Interlude

Terence decided that, although the adolescent young of both sexes are disagreeable, boys are preferable to girls But he was not really interested in either. He was waiting anxiously for the girl with the lupin blue eyes to join them, which she did, strolling up lazily. There was something very peaceful about her. Although they were upon a sandy beach, she had managed to find another piece of grass to chew.

They all three fell upon her.

"Come on. Time to bathe. No shirking. Moppy. O, yes, you are We've heard that tale before. Heave her to, boys. Get her round the knees. Kinks. Collar her low."

In vain Terence protested. He wanted to talk to her. It was no good They bore her off, selfish little pests. He wondered that she stuck the situation at all. He determined to get hold of the boys one day. To try and awake in them some vague consideration, some decent feelings. Boys had better natures to appeal to. He doubted whether girls had.

They saw each other every day. A charming interlude it was, haunted for Terence by the fear that one day the mother giantess would appear and, remarking, "No followers allowed," remove the party.

Nothing happened. They bathed together and had their picnic lunches side by side, and one day, when she suggested bringing tea down, she turned to him with:

"Shall we bring some for you, as well?"

His heart missed a beat in astonishing fashion. They took their tea to a cove reached by clambering over the rocks and round the corner. They sat side by side on the beach, letting the sand run through their fingers like gold dust, talking of nothing in particular. He did not know anything about her, not even her name. Moppy probably was short for something. He longed to ask her, but it was difficult to begin. He longed to tell her about himself, and ask whether she minded a man not always having been very respectable. But it was impossible to find the right opening.

Then the boys came and buried her up to her waist in the sand. It was no good her saying it was hot or heavy. They besought her to lie still and went on. It was after tea, when the outside sized Winks was paddling that Terence found himself sitting alone with the two boys. Miss Moppy had taken Winks' hat down to her and stood at the water's edge holding it out after the manner of one enticing a donkey with carrots.

"Darling, do take it. You know you had a headache yesterday after paddling without it."

But would she? There she stood, all stout limbs and hair, laughing.

"Bring it to me, good Moppy. Come on, then. Waves won't hurt you."

Terence said, "You know if you chaps set an example to your sister she would probably follow it."

Reveals Her Secret

They stared at him, great, innocent, bright eyes full of wonder.

"An example of what, sir?"

"Obedience, and—er—thoughtfulness to Miss—er—Miss—to your governess."

They stared at him, wonder breaking up into joy too huge to be born. They fell on the sand writhing and gasping.

"O, crumbs! O, hek! I say, Moppy. Come here, Winks and listen. O, chaps, my sides. Lummee."

She came slowly back up the beach to join them, chewing her grass.

"What is the matter?"

"He thinks you are the governess."

The lupin blue eyes regarded Terence full of amusement.

"O, Lummee. Our governess. She can't add a line of figure together. She can't do simple multiplication. She couldn't tell you who Anne Boleyn was!"

She said, "Shut up. How dare you expose the nakedness of the land, you brats." She laughed and said to Terence, "I'm their mother."

He stared at her stupefied, taking in her neatness, her littleness. The boys were bigger than she was already Nothing would deter the girl from achieving six foot, and that quite soon.

"Their mother," he said, and was dumb before the wonders of nature. He was appalled, too, at his mistake. She would not be pleased at being taken for a governess. He could not imagine now what had put such an idea into his head.

"Don't be upset." She sat down again beside him. "I married rather young, and of course, they have grown excessively. I must have fed them wrong. Eric was quite a small man."

ILLUSTRATION BY P. T. JENSEN.

He said, "Star, for God's sake marry me."

"Mine is Terence Smith."

He waited breathlessly to hear her say, "What, the Terence Smith." She merely chewed her grass. He thought with relief that she was probably not a well read woman. He mopped his forehead relieved.

"Is your husband here, too?"

She shook her head. There was a little silence. Terence grew red for fear the voice of hope that clamored so loudly within him would reach her ears. Just as if it had done she said, "He died two years ago. He was a lot older than I am. The children called him Poppy. He was a stout man, very dignified. It could never have been a success. I often feel he had a lucky escape. Some men ought not to marry."

She dreamed seeing such men.

"Life is very lonely for men who do not marry," he said more emotionally than he intended.

She said, "There are worse things than loneliness," and dreamed, her eyes on the sea, remembering them. He lay on his back on the sand, his hat tilted over his nose, watching her. Could it be possible she was the mother of those monsters larger than herself? He supposed she knew.

Human Tiger in Action

The Human Tiger could not think what he did with himself all day. She was always questioning him, but he eluded her nimbly. He walked. He went, he said, to see friends in the neighborhood. She offered to drive him over in her car to try and find out who they were. He awoke at night and grew cold with the feeling that she was bound to wear him down at last and get it out of him.

In the meantime the days passed happily enough. Terence had never enjoyed a summer so much. He began to find attractions even in the children He found out things about Mrs. Allardyce little by little. That she lived in London; that she was eighteen when she married Eric, and spent her honeymoon in tears; that her friends called her Star. That she had meant for ages to take a house in the country.

"I never get any further with it. I write to the agents, who respond with whole envelopes of particulars of places, each so exactly what I am looking for that in the difficulty of deciding which to inspect first I am lost and do nothing. That is the sort of woman I am."

Warmly Terence found himself advising her not to hurry, even before he realized why. Because Markhams was already waiting for her, charmingly furnished, if only she would come to it and bring her atmosphere of peace and good fun with her, and her long grass to chew, and all her children. He was growing fond of the children. They annoyed him at times, yet he found the very annoyance had a medicinal quality. They might upset his house a bit, but how good they would be for him, how useful he would be to those boys, for who could bring it home to them better than he that there comes a time when a man looks back and regards his own follies and rashnesses only with a sigh.

She evidently had some money and he had plenty. They could have a lot of fun together and, being a woman of the world with a sense of humor, he hoped she might forgive the past without the effort it would have been to those who make heavy work of details of this sort.

He knew he must tell her, but it was extraordinary how hard it was to begin, partly because if she wasn't the sort of woman he hoped it meant the end, and he did not want such a pleasant thing to die He determined to get it over the day they went yachting, but Winks being seasick, without much plan, anywhere, gave him a good excuse for putting it off that day. He determined to do it after dinner as they sat together on the veranda of her hotel night after night, but it was so peaceful and so friendly, just the two of them together, that he never had the courage to break the spell.

On Friday afternoon he got down to it. "Star," he began, but then it was too late. Over the blue of the afternoon sea a rowboat appeared like a child's toy and came ashore with a little bump and scrape on the beach

Next Sunday

I shall come here lots. No, I don't bathe. I can't swim, but I will watch you two."

The afternoon was completely spoiled because she never left them. The evening peace was gone, for there she was, too. And he knew that his chances with Star were now ruined as had been his chances with Maisie, and he wondered again, interminably, what grudge Mrs. MacMasters had against him, over from the old days. He sent a wire to Markhams to ask when the painters would be out, and abandoned hope, and drank too much that night for the first time for two years.

He hardly expected her to smile at him next morning, for without doubt she now knew all and in the unexpurgated edition. She was sitting in the same place, hugging her knees. All she said was:

"Well."

He looked round fearfully.

"Is she here yet?"

"Not yet, but she is coming."

She chewed her grass. "Are you coming to bathe?" She looked at him, her lupin blue eyes full of amusement. "She can't swim."

Whatever she knew she was just the same as usual. His fingers were all thumbs as he got on with his undressing. Instead of leaving his clothes in their usual orderly heap they were all scattered about. Some way out a raft lay at anchor. They swam to it side by side and clambered up.

"Such a blessing," said Star in her comfortable voice, "that she cannot swim."

He didn't suppose he had a chance, but there was no more time for shilly-shallying. He said, "Star, for God's sake marry me, dear."

Her eyes dreamed, very blue over the sea. She spoke as if to herself: "Well, one might do worse."

He shouted, seizing her small wet hand. "You don't mean that?"

She laughed up at him. "Why not, don't you?"

"Darling, darling, of course I do."

She said, "This raft capsizes very easily. You can't be at all emotional on it. Look, Ida has arrived."

They could see her passing slowly along the shore, looking for them. His garments, scattered here and there behind a rock, would presently give her the clew.

"Such a blessing," she murmured, "that Ida cannot swim. I knew there must be something she could not do, if only one went on looking."

"Star, I ought to tell you I am not very respectable. Perhaps you don't realize."

She said comfortably, "I realized I heard about you in Delhi years ago. So that even before Ida so kindly enlightened me I knew."

"I can't make her out. She just follows me round enlightening every one. I must have offended her unwittingly long ago, and she has forgiven but will never, never forget."

"She means to marry you herself. Surely you realize that? What children men are! She told me two years ago that it was only a matter of time, but unfortunately she has forgotten that she told me. There comes a time when women start forgetting what they said yesterday. That is when the wise ones go into private life and remain there."

He said, "Ida? Me? I never gave her any grounds."

"A woman like Ida does not wait for grounds. I saw the minute I came here and determined to save you."

He said with immense relief, "You knew all the time, and it made no difference."

"I've always admired people who do things. I have always been quite respectable, from laziness. That's the sort of woman I am. It is so much easier to be good. And if you are not very respectable at least you are old enough to know it, and one cannot expect everything. You are a brave man or you would not dream of taking on all these enormous children."

"I've plenty of money."

Painting the Future

"You'll need every penny of it, dear. Have you figured out what it means? Half-terms in seaside hotels full of other parents having half-terms. There are fat flies on the windows, and everything that you touch is sticky and smells faintly of bull's eyes. And you have to entertain their friends. My dear, their friends! But it is no good objecting. They have to develop a sense of proportion. And then the cricket matches, and long, long summers at the seaside, with every road so blocked with prams and scooters you can't move about a walk. And never, never can make a single plan for one's self, dear, but one or the other of them gets measles or falls from a great height."

"Surely not often."

"Again and again. And it gets higher and higher, and the doctors who mend them up charge by the foot. No one can possibly visualize family life unless he has experienced it. And then birthdays! What general elections are to England, birthdays are to the home. No sooner are the crumbs swept up from one than another is upon us, and never by any chance do they wish for anything cheaper than a bicycle."

"It is obvious I cannot leave you to face this struggle alone for another day."

She said, "The funny part is, I like it." The lupin blue eyes grew soft. "I like it, because I remember."

"You remember."

"A birthday morning. The ache of excitement, and how one counted the days till half-term, and the glory of it, and bull's eyes, all shiny and black in their bag. And one's first bicycle. I called mine by a Christian name—Charlie. It was so dear to me. I think I saw it not as a bicycle but a handsome young man with a slight mustache. It was my first love. And the glamor of bed at half-past eight when the proper time was seven. There is nothing quite so glorious in after life as bed at half-past eight and trying to be good, and failing, and being the friend of bicycles. O, lovely world."

He said nothing, suddenly remembering.

Down the beach came Ida. She had found them and was waving her parasol. They pretended not to see her. They were safe. She could not swim.

"When will you marry me?"

"Practically any day but Tuesday. I have promised to take them to the horse show that day. What a queer place we have chosen to get engaged. I can see a jelly fish. Look at Ida. She is becoming very impatient because we do not go to her. There comes a time when a determined woman must face the fact that she cannot have everything her own way. Must you hold my hand so tight?"

"Darling, I must."

"If you become emotional on this raft we shall sink. Here comes Winks, so we shall sink anyhow. Darling Winks, must you join us just now? There really isn't room."

The raft submerged slowly.

She said before she sank, "There is just one thing I want to tell you before we join Ida on the beach."

She turned to him, her lupin blue eyes full of laughter. "I love you," she said. "Perhaps you are not very respectable, but you are a dear."

Chances Ruined

Ida MacMasters stared at them and they stared back at her. It warmed Terence's heart to realize they had never looked at him with that expression in their eyes. He felt suddenly and proudly fond of them. Ida MacMasters said, "Dear me. They are all very unlike one another, aren't they?"

Star chewed her grass and said, "Yes, I like them that way." Mrs. MacMasters turned to Terence. "So that's where you have been hiding yourself. I must say it's a charming place. I don't blame you. So secluded. I shall come here lots. No, I don't bathe. I can't swim, but I will watch you two."

The afternoon was completely spoiled because she never left them. The evening peace was gone, for there she was, too. And he knew that his chances with Star were now ruined as had been his chances with Maisie, and he wondered again, interminably, what grudge Mrs. MacMasters had against him, over from the old days. "I've plenty of money."

Painting the Future

"You'll need every penny of it, dear. Have you figured out what it means? Half-terms in seaside hotels full of other parents having half-terms. There are fat flies on the windows, and everything that you touch is sticky and smells faintly of bull's eyes. And you have to entertain their friends. My dear, their friends! But it is no good objecting. They have to develop a sense of proportion. And then the cricket matches, and long, long summers at the seaside, with every road so blocked with prams and scooters you can't move about a walk. And never, never can make a single plan for one's self, dear, but one or the other of them gets measles or falls from a great height."

"Surely not often."

"Again and again. And it gets higher and higher, and the doctors who mend them up charge by the foot. No one can possibly visualize family life unless he has experienced it. And then birthdays! What general elections are to England, birthdays are to the home. No sooner are the crumbs swept up from one than another is upon us, and never by any chance do they wish for anything cheaper than a bicycle."

"It is obvious I cannot leave you to face this struggle alone for another day."

She said, "The funny part is, I like it." The lupin blue eyes grew soft. "I like it, because I remember."

"You remember."

"A birthday morning. The ache of excitement, and how one counted the days till half-term, and the glory of it, and bull's eyes, all shiny and black in their bag. And one's first bicycle. I called mine by a Christian name—Charlie. It was so dear to me. I think I saw it not as a bicycle but a handsome young man with a slight mustache. It was my first love. And the glamor of bed at half-past eight when the proper time was seven. There is nothing quite so glorious in after life as bed at half-past eight and trying to be good, and failing, and being the friend of bicycles. O, lovely world."

He said nothing, suddenly remembering.

Down the beach came Ida. She had found them and was waving her parasol. They pretended not to see her. They were safe. She could not swim.

"When will you marry me?"

"Practically any day but Tuesday. I have promised to take them to the horse show that day. What a queer place we have chosen to get engaged. I can see a jelly fish. Look at Ida. She is becoming very impatient because we do not go to her. There comes a time when a determined woman must face the fact that she cannot have everything her own way. Must you hold my hand so tight?"

"Darling, I must."

"If you become emotional on this raft we shall sink. Here comes Winks, so we shall sink anyhow. Darling Winks, must you join us just now? There really isn't room."

The raft submerged slowly.

She said before she sank, "There is just one thing I want to tell you before we join Ida on the beach."

She turned to him, her lupin blue eyes full of laughter. "I love you," she said. "Perhaps you are not very respectable, but you are a dear."

"So easy on the clothes!" says Mrs. J. A. Murphy of Tessville

"Dirt soaks right out in Rinso suds and clothes come whiter than when I used to scrub them. This Rinso way is so easy on the clothes. On my hands, too. I certainly like Rinso suds; they're so creamy and active. I use this economical soap for dishes, glassware and all cleaning."

In Search of the Unusual

By Edith Weigle

Get Away from the Stiff and the Formal If You'd Bring Individuality Into Your Home.

THE individualist, addressing herself for the first time to the task of furnishing a home, will be fascinated by the realization that never has there been a wider scope for individual taste and personality than today. Her house can reflect her and her taste just as her clothes can.

There is a great increase of interest in period furniture, as witness the thousands of excellent reproductions of Chippendale, Duncan Phyfe, Heppelwhite, Sheraton, and the Adams. But there is no hard and fast rule about furnishing an entire house or apartment in one period. To do so, indeed, would be to create a museum instead of a home. One would find oneself wandering from room to room as from one exhibit to another.

Even in the days when all smart London was going to the shop of Chippendale, houses still clung to the fine pieces of furniture made by his predecessors. A Georgian interior combined as many as four or five periods with perfect harmony. Recently in viewing the galleries of a Chicago decorator known for his 18th century English settings I noticed how skillfully he combined various pieces of walnut, none closely related, yet all of the same feeling.

Any home owner can do the same thing. We can't all buy "originals," but we can get excellent copies and group them in a way and against a background that is characteristic of ourselves.

An unusual chair, or chest, or table adds a bit of interest to any room. In one apartment whose owner is full of individuality and artistic taste an old carved chest is placed against a wall in a small drawing room. Two tall candlesticks with cathedral candles stand at either end of the chest and between them, on the wall, hangs an exquisite terra cotta figure of the Madonna. A most unusual idea for a drawing room and a beautiful one.

Have you read "Collector's Luck in Spain," by Alice Van Leer Carrick. [Little, Brown & Co.]? It is full of ideas for the lover of the unusual and written with such charm and vivacity that one wants immediately to pack up and sail for the sunny land of the Alhambra and the Alcazar gardens, and for those romantic islands of the Balearic group where George Sand and Chopin spent many golden days.

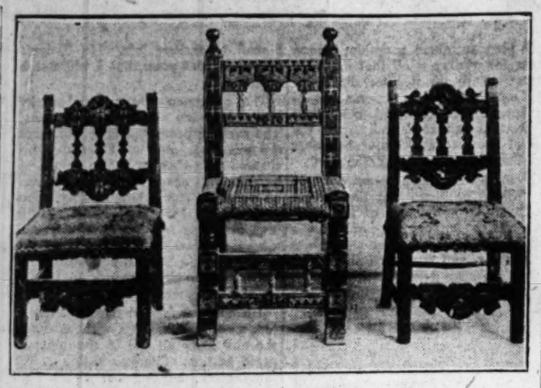
The author wanders from town to town, collecting the most amazing treasures, some of which are shown in the book's illustrations, and paying almost nothing for them. And for those of her readers who are going to Spain Mrs. Carrick gives a list of addresses of all the "antiquities" shops she visited, with comments about the wares of each. Besides interesting old pieces of furniture, she bought odd bits of copper and brass, old wrought iron from Cordoba, a silver necklace from Granada, silver buttons, a marvelous old fan with ivory sticks inlaid with gold and silver, faience pottery, colored tiles and ancient door knockers.

"Collector's Luck in Spain" holds hundreds of hints for the decorator, for the antiquarian and for anyone who loves rare and fascinating things, or the thrill of exploring out of the way places.

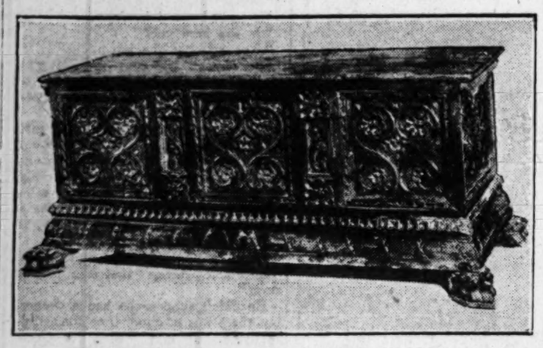
The pictures shown today illustrate several types of Spanish furniture that may be picked up in the antiques department of our large Chicago stores, and that may also be found in good reproductions. The old chest would make a gorgeous piece de resistance for an entrance hall, or library. Made of carved walnut with molded hinged cover, the front and sides are paneled into sections carved in relief with opposed S-scrollings bearing formalized blossoms. It is 54 inches long and 25 inches high. The base is fitted with a drawer. The chest stands on crude paw feet.

The chairs, you will agree, are divertingly different. The two small ones would make an artistic contrast in a room done in oak or chestnut, which woods are becoming more and more popular, by the way. They date back to the 17th century and are of chestnut. The scrolled cross rails of the backs are carved with blossoms and connected by three small splats. Seats are in green and yellow floral broché.

The large chair between these two is one of eight rush seated side chairs of carved and decorated pine. It has square posts with turned knob finials and arcaded slats. The whole set would be delightful for the dining porch of a summer cottage, used with a simple peasant type of table.



Chairs typical of the furniture of ancient Spain.



This lovely old chest would bring beauty to any room.

A FRIEND IN NEED

By Sally Joy Brown

Discarded Baby Clothes in Your Home Mean Comfort and Assurance to Needy Mothers Unable to Provide These Necessities for Their Children.

I want to be the medium through which the friends in need and the friends in deed may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy and you would gladly give it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

ONLY those who have been blessed with motherhood realize that joy and sorrow can accompany such an important vocation. And they alone can know the misery of expectant motherhood when they are able to make no preparation for the blessed event.

In homes where luxury or even moderate comfort prevail the business of getting ready for the expected day becomes an all absorbing and important thing. The mother to be is given every care and attention. Medical advice, diet, and comfort become her constant fare. She shops about for the dainty garments and accessories that are to be the baby's wardrobe and for the things that will make a model nursery. She spends hours stitching on fine linens and filmy laces into which go so much love.

In poor and squalid homes babies are expected, too. But here, though just as much love awaits them, there can be no such preparation. The needy mother can give no thought to her diet but must be satisfied with any kind of food and feels fortunate if she get enough of it. She is beset with worry lest she will not be able to give her precious burden the proper care when it arrives, and the question of a layette, a bassinet or bed in which to lay it, and the other accessories, becomes a problem.

In their distress these women must turn to those of us who are in a position to help them. And most households where there are or have been tiny babies can give this help. The first garments are almost never worn out and usually one has them in such profusion that many of them aren't used at all. Of course, we like to keep these bits of linen and lace for sentimental reasons, perhaps, and it doesn't occur to us that we are being a bit selfish in doing so.

These things that your infant son or daughter have no further use for would clothe, keep warm, and bring comfort to the young arrival in some needy home. I know where many of them are and I know the joy and happiness such a gift would bring to them. Won't you resurrect the baby clothes that you have stored away or collect together those that your child is outgrowing and give them to one of these needy, expectant mothers? Let me know that you can give them and I shall be happy to put you in touch with someone who can put them to good use.

Elderly Man Needs Clothing.

"I am a man, 74, out of work and badly in need of clothing, which I cannot buy. If you can get me an overcoat and suit, size 42 or 44, I will be most grateful to you. J. W."

At his age finding work will be a great deal more difficult than it is for a younger man, and, too, he has less resistance to withstand suffering. Can you make his job hunting a bit easier for him by providing him with a warm overcoat and a much needed suit?

These People Need Help.

"We are three months behind in our rent, my husband and son are out of work and cannot find anything to do, and we are badly in need of clothing. My husband is ill because he hasn't anything warm to wear. He wears size 46 or 48; shoes, size 11½; my son wears size 38 or 40; shoes, size 7; I wear size 42 or 44, and shoes size 7½. Mrs. D. W."

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. are an elderly couple who, without employment or other income, are having a most difficult time. Can you help to make the going a little easier for them by donating the clothing they need?

Wheel Chair Would Help.

"I am trying to find a wheel chair for an invalid I know. She is a deserving person, very poor, and cannot move about. A wheel chair would be such a help to her. Mrs. J. E."

Lying in bed, day after day, is uncomfortable and tiresome for the patient. Having a wheel chair would give her new freedom. Can you supply it?

Colorful Bedrooms

By WillElla de Camp

Without an Expensive Outlay for Furnishings, This House Is Attractive Because of Color Combinations and Interesting Treatment.

EQUAL in charm and personality are the three bedrooms and two baths which comprise the second floor of the Long Island home whose first floor interiors were described here last Sunday. None of the decorations or furnishings is expensive, but the color combinations and the novel ways in which tried and true materials are used achieve delightful and fascinating results.

The largest bedroom, which is directly over the living room, is happily equipped with a fireplace. Walls are painted peach color, while the narrow baseboard and wooden mantel are marbleized black. At the windows are peach colored organdy glass curtains, simply made, with plain two inch hems instead of the usual ruffled edge. They are quite full and hang straight to the sill. Overdraperies of flowered glazed chintz on a peach colored ground reach to the floor and are finished with a scalloped accordion plaited edging in old blue. Valances and tiebacks are made to match.

In front of a group of windows stands a delicately feminine dressing table with a flounce of plain peach glazed chintz trimmed in old blue to match the draperies. The surface of the table is covered with the same chintz and there is a plate glass top. An accompanying bench is unholstered in the flowered chintz. A mirror in a walnut frame is flanked by a pair of blue glass lamps with parchment shades. These are stained peach color and are decorated with a leafy design in silver. Silver toilet necessities and blue glass bottles give a distinctive touch.

Twin beds of walnut in a simple, dignified design are covered with the ever charming and practical candlewick spreads in a lovely shade of peach. Between the beds, in place of the ubiquitous night stand, there is a set of narrow open shelves in walnut, the kind which are usually hung upon the wall! They are exceptionally useful here, as the top holds a decorative lamp and small clock, a water bottle and glass are kept on the next shelf, and a few choice books are handily lodged in the lowest compartment.

At one side of the fireplace is a chaise longue upholstered in old blue and mauve. Extra cushions are in blue, mauve, and peach, with a black one for accent. A triangular table beside the chaise longue holds smoking accessories, still allowing plenty of room for the accommodation of any other small objects which may be desired.

A small desk, painted old blue and decorated with floral medallions in the Venetian manner, stands against the wall at the opposite side of the fireplace. An armchair of graceful proportions upholstered in the drapery chintz is conveniently placed where it may be used in conjunction with the desk or turned vis-à-vis with the chaise longue to make a pleasant fireside group. Completing the furnishings in this room is a chest of drawers in walnut surmounted by an interesting old shaving mirror in a walnut frame. Rugs are of deep dull blue wool chenille.

In the bathroom the walls are covered a little more than halfway up with pale blue tiles. Tub, lavatory and water closet are finished peach color, and all of the faucets are chromium plated. Above the tiling there is a waterproof washable paper in peach color, plaided in a deeper peach. Shower and window curtains are of waterproof chintz in peach color banded in light blue. On the blue tiled floor deep peach colored washable rugs are used.

The young son of the family occupies another of the bedrooms. It has been furnished and decorated to suit his own ideas, and the result is most gratifying. Since the exposure is northern the walls are painted light yellow. Woodwork is stained like antique oak to match the furniture, reproductions of Jacobean pieces.

At the windows are glass curtains of coarse, square meshed net in yellow with overdraperies of copper colored rep edged in deep green and yellow upholsterer's fringe. An India print with deep copper and green tones in its design is appropriately used for a bed cover. In one corner of the room placed near a set of open book shelves stands a comfortable armchair covered in dark green corduroy. This is accompanied by a good reading lamp of wrought iron with a parchment shade banded in copper and green. Numdah rugs in a colorful design on a copper ground are used on the dark oak floor.

Last of the bedrooms is a small, perfectly appointed guest room. Walls are covered with a gracefully patterned floral paper on a cream colored ground. Woodwork painted cream is relieved by a line of dull rose. Cream colored silk gauze glass curtains and draperies of dull rose drapery taffeta with deep ruffled edges are used at the windows. All the furniture, including the twin beds, is painted deep cream, decorated with floral medallions. Bed covers with deep flounces at the side match the window draperies. There are cream colored silk shades bound with dull rose velvet ribbon on the various lamps.

An armchair in rose and green striped silk is supplemented by a small book table and reading light. Sage green wool chenille rugs are placed at strategic points.

Especially decorated to go with this lovely little room is a small bathroom with shower stall, lavatory and water closet finished in cream color. Wall tiles are in light sage green and the upper walls are painted deep cream. Waterproofed chintz showing rose colored polka dots on a cream ground makes attractive shower and window curtains. A dull rose rug and towels bordered in rose complete the ensemble.

Macaroni Supreme.

1 cup soft cheese [American]
½ cup butter
1 cup soft bread crumbs
1 cup cream
3 eggs
½ tsp. salt.
1 package macaroni

Cream the cheese with the butter. Add the bread crumbs which have been soaked for a few minutes in the cream. Add the eggs, slightly beaten, and the salt. Now add the macaroni which has been cooked until tender in boiling water. Bake in a greased pan 30 minutes in a moderate oven.

For special occasions I pour the following sauce over the macaroni just before serving:

Cream 1 tablespoon of butter with 1 tablespoon flour. Add ½ cup of milk and ½ cup cream. Cook until thick. Then add 1 cup mushrooms and some of the mushroom juice. The macaroni is complete without this sauce, which forms only a special treat. F. C. DeS.

Sugar Cookies.

1 cup sugar
½ cup butter
1 egg
¼ cup milk
2 cups flour
½ tsp. salt
3 tsps. baking powder
1 tsp. vanilla

Cream the butter. Add the sugar, then the milk and beaten egg. Add the vanilla, then the flour, baking powder, and salt, which have been mixed and sifted together. This should make a soft dough.

Turn on to a floured board and roll out a small portion at a time to ¼ inch thickness. Cut with a floured cookie cutter and place on a buttered pan. Bake in a hot oven about 10 minutes.

This recipe makes 48 cookies. M. L.

Old Dutch Potato Pancakes.

2 cups grated raw potatoes
1 egg
½ cup milk
1 cup flour
2 tsps. salt
3 tsps. baking powder

Sift salt, flour, and baking powder together. Mix all ingredients lightly and bake on a griddle, but not too fast or the potatoes will not be done. This will make about 16 medium sized pancakes. Mrs. A. B.

Uphold Wife's Neatness.

LONDON.—(AP)—A wife has the right to "tidy up" her husband's desk, and an English judge backs her up. When a man complained that his wife had destroyed papers in his desk, the judge approved, ruling, "You must make allowance for that."

Would you care to pass on to some one else your pet economy? If so address Pet Economy, Chicago Tribune.

An Eye for Bargains.

Not long ago in front of a dry goods store I saw a large basket of soiled gloves marked "Five Cents a Pair." Thinking they were mismates or odd sizes, I decided to get some to use when putting coal into the furnace just to keep from soiling my hands.

Upon examining the gloves, however, I found several pair in my size and that they were all the product of a prominent manufacturer. The only reason they sold at that price was that they were dirty and there wasn't any demand for white gloves at the time.

When I reached home, I washed them thoroughly, dyed them a light tan, and now I am well supplied with nice looking gloves at the ridiculous price of 5 cents a pair. V. M. S.

Dyes Thread with Dresses.

When dyeing dresses I always take about eight or ten yards of white thread, wrap it around a clothespin and put it into the dye pot. This I read I use to mend my dresses; I find that it matches the dress just perfectly and the mending cannot even be seen. R. P.

Saves Dry Cleaning Bill.

I have kept my overshoes looking clean and neat for several years by washing them in the washing machine, in the soapy suds that I have left after doing the laundry. After they are dry they look like new, and I have saved a dry cleaning bill. D. S.

Baskets from Old Tin Cans.

I have a relative who makes the most attractive flower baskets from old tin cans. She takes the size 2 or 2½ cans and attaches a wire handle. Then she takes small pieces of old newspaper and dips them in a thick starch; these she sticks on the can to represent bark. She covers the handle in the same way and sets the can aside to dry.

When dry she paints it with a walnut shellac, which she purchases for ten cents. These baskets she sells for $1 each, and if she puts paper flowers in them she gets 25 cents more.

These unique baskets have helped her make many a dollar, as they sell readily. A. L. B.

Illinois Boy Amazes Mother

"My son's stomach was often upset and he suffered a lot from colds," says Mrs. Frank V. Sheets, 4926 W. Division St., Chicago. "He was feverish and his breath was bad. We found he was constipated.

"My mother used California Fig Syrup with us, so I decided to give Horland some. It surely surprised me to see how quickly it stopped his feverishness, cleared his breath and tongue, regulated his bowels; made him a happy, strong and energetic boy again."

Millions of mothers know the quick, safe way to cleanse and regulate the bowels of bilious, headachy, constipated children is with California Fig Syrup. Every child loves its rich, fruity flavor. It acts without griping or discomfort; increases appetite; helps tone and strengthen weak stomach and bowels.

For 50 years, doctors have endorsed this pure vegetable product for constipation; to open the bowels during colds or children's diseases.

Beginning in the Tribune Next Sunday!

Ken

Here's a daring expose of the conflict between marriage and business. The story of Lola and Ken—who live, perhaps, in your own apartment building or in the bungalow down the street—is vivid and realistic. . . . It is a drama that is being enacted in American homes and offices every day.

Lola's heartbreaking struggle to determine whether she prefers personal liberty and economic independence or drudgery and her husband's love makes "Week End Wives" an engrossing tale which moves swiftly on to a surprising climax.

WORDS can certainly paint a picture. Read this:

"Our little boy is 3 and Anne is 7 months.

"Do you answer personal inquiries? If so, is there such a thing as 'instant obedience'? I have yet to see it. The only time I get anything like it is when I have a little switch in my hand and then he looks at me as though he hated me, and I don't blame him. I'd hate anybody that stood over me with a switch.

"But all I want is an ordinary amount of obedience that I can depend upon. I can always get him to do what I want if I have time to think up and play some game or get around him, but I haven't always time and there are times when he must mind for his own safety's sake.

"What to do? I hate to bellow at him and I hate to switch him—and nothing is just as bad.

"He is a sunny, good natured little fellow but lately he sulks and pouts and goes off by himself, and glowers and mutters and says his mother is naughty and he doesn't like Daddy.

"Often lately when something happens to hurt him accidentally—such as my bumping him as I go by—he goes off and pouts. I always apologize when I hurt him and tell him I didn't mean to and so on, but I don't think he believes me.

Sympathetic Mother.

"And really if I had to do a lot of things I didn't especially like to do—not run as far up and down the street as I wanted to—leave my toys in the playbox when somebody else was cleaning—go to bed for a nap and stay there even if I heard a car in the driveway—I wouldn't especially like for the persons that made me do them, especially if they spanked or switched me—and I wouldn't put an extra bump or two past them!

"But these are reasonable things. They ought to be accepted as a matter of course and not fought out every day. If I knew what is wrong in my methods on Jimmy, I could probably do better on Anne."

In this case, I am quite convinced that the baby is a big factor. Not that she is loved any more than Jimmy is. Not that anybody means to give her more attention. But in the natural course of events, what happens when a second baby is born into a family? The story reads something like this:

The first child—let's call him Jimmy—has had two and a half years of being the center of attention. To be sure he may have had too much of it, but that's not his fault.

His mother has always had time for him—to play with him, to read to him, even to wait for him to obey.

Changes Everything.

Then just when he is securely entrenched in his great, new world, when he can walk and talk pretty well, when he is gaining control over his muscles and is really beginning to "feel his oats"—

Bang! Everything is changed.

He probably doesn't realize that it is because an exciting event has happened—because he has a baby sister.

But he does know that everything is changed.

Probably he has not been wisely prepared for the change. Perhaps he has not, over a period of months, been told that he is going to have a little brother or sister. Perhaps he has not been allowed to share in the rather miraculous happening. Perhaps the whole thing is sprung on him so that, quite suddenly, everything is changed.

He finds now that the new baby is the first interest—both with visitors and the family. He finds now that with feedings and naps, bathings and dressings of the baby, his mother has less time for him—either to play with him or be patient with him or to wait for him to obey.

Does he like the change? Not at all.

Youngster's Story.

He may not connect it with the baby, but he doesn't like it, nevertheless. How then can he express his dislike—by saying:

"See here, mother, I think this is a raw deal! Do you realize that I got used to being treated in a certain way and that all of a sudden everything is changed! Gosh, I don't know where I'm at. I'm only two and a half and I was just beginning to get my bearings and then all of a sudden everything's different." Does he say that? Hardly.

But what he does do is instinctively to resist the change. He pouts—he sulks—he disobeys—he may even do unspelled naughty things to get back some of the attention he has lost. He becomes, in a word, hard to manage.

If I were the mother, whether I were convinced of this being the reason, I'd take a chance on it as the first step in a new handling of Jimmy, especially if I had already proved that my previous methods were a failure.

First, I'd watch myself and other people and the various situations that arose, and look at it all with Jimmy's eyes.

Then I'd burn up the switch and smudge the spanks to limbo—and quietly try to restore to Billy some of his lost prestige.

Back to Stage Come Stars of Cinema Fame

Eugene O'Brien, Vilma Banky, Rod La Rocque.

By Charles Collins.

THE stage and the films appear to have entered into an informal treaty of reciprocity, so far as acting "talent" is concerned. The stage incubates bright young things of both sexes—golden girls and lively lads—and as soon as they have fledged a few fine feathers the films lure them away to the foundries of Hollywood. There they serve their time, acquiring prodigious reputations in the land through the enlargement of their comely countenances and the magnification of their vibrant voices upon the talking screen. They become shadowy demigods of the realms of popular entertainment.

But Hollywood is a place where myths are junked as well as manufactured. After a while, for some mysterious reason or other, this demigod or that demigoddess wanders away from the cinematic paradise. They return to the purgatory of the drama, eager for contacts with reality, praying for a fat part in a good play, willing to woo audiences rather than mine before megaphones for reward decidedly less than the king's ransom to which they have been accustomed. They come back to the old game, and the stage welcomes them as penitent prodigals. Once in a while it may lose sacrifice a fatted calf in their honor, but usually it merely invites them to take pot luck.

Back in the Army Again.

All of which is apropos of the appearance of Eugene O'Brien in "Sour Grapes" and of Vilma Banky and Rod La Rocque in "Cherries Are Ripe." They have deserted the Elysian fields of camera land—the flower bright estates of Beverly Hills, the gardens and the swimming pools, the joys and raptures of that enchanted profession in which nobody earns less than $1,000 a week—for the rigors of theatrical tours in the worst of all possible playgoing seasons. They are back in the army again, drilling away in competition with such hardy veterans as Mrs. Fiske, Ethel Barrymore, Fred Stone and William Hodge.

The case of Mr. O'Brien is somewhat disturbing. He is a better actor than when he went away. He may have lost the glamour of his ambrosial youth when matinée girls often swooned at the first glimpse of his dark radiance, but middle age becomes him. He is still a romantic figure, set in the pattern of a congenital hero, and he seems more at ease on the stage than he was before he soared to the heights where Norma Talmadge holds her olympian sway. Screen experience appears to have mellowed and humanized the gallant O'Brien.

And yet one should worry about him, for his return is not as happy as it might have been. His wings are beating in the void of a play that should have been permitted to languish in its author's trunk. "Sour Grapes" is one of the thinnest stretches of dialogue that was ever recited from 8:30 to 10:45 of a winter night.

Too Much Love.

Mr. O'Brien adorns it with his jaunty manner and his slanting, worldly smile of utter sophistication; Edna Hibbard, his co-star, brightens it with her pert, skillful banter; and the most giggle stricken audience of the season filled every seat, even to the gallery, at its première. But it remains an empty little charade, totally lacking in the stir and bustle of persuasive life.

After attending "Sour Grapes," one is inclined to ask: "Just what is the matter with this attempt at light comedy?" It sounds like a play; it has a set of scenery, and a group of characters whose lives are in an tropic little muddle. Its people, moreover, talk like human beings and occasionally say something bright. "Sour Grapes" might easily be a play—and yet it isn't.

Well, as I see it, the trouble is that "Sour Grapes" deals with nothing but love. The author has made the mistake of forgetting that life comes before the so-called tender passion. The characters in "Sour Grapes" are not people, but puppets lettered A, B, C, and D. They have no backgrounds whatsoever. Their environment, their place in the social system, their tastes, hobbies, habits, idiosyncrasies—all this and everything else that serves to define and identify character has been omitted from "Sour Grapes." They belong to a country club, and the husband is rich enough to offer his wife $15,000 a year as alimony; these are the only facts in the case which the dialogue submits to the audience.

Nothing else but love. Three little words. You can write a ballad with that material, of course. But the drama demands something more substantial. A slice of life, no matter how thin, for example, upon which the honeyed emotion can be spread.

Here's a Beauty.

Miss Banky and Mr. La Rocque are lighter than Mr. O'Brien in their vehicle. "Cherries Are Ripe"—another horticultural title!—also bears down heavily upon love, but evades the boredom of the subject. It creates characters that seem to have some life outside of the boudoir; and it establishes an environment for them. It interests its audience in the nonerotic aspects of their careers. It offers sufficient proof that these people are Hungarian aristocrats on a country estate; and that in the background of their existence are orchards, fields, gypsies, military maneuvers, and all the urbane pleasures of Budapest, including the opera and the Jockey club. In a word, it has "atmosphere."

Miss Banky is such a lovely creature "in person" that one wonders how the film producers, so avid for blonde angels of her type, have permitted her to escape. She is my idea of the proper model for a painting of Helen of Troy. Frequenters of the chorus palaces inform me that she is more decorative behind the footlights than she was on the screen, and this

Two Plays Score Triumph in One Broadway Week

Noel Coward Hits Bell; So Does Lynn Riggs.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—By way of change we had a good time in the theater, this week. Two hits and an interesting mystery. One hit, "Green Grow the Lilacs," by Lynn Riggs, the prairie poet from Oklahoma. One hit, "Private Lives," by Noel Coward, the human and lightly cynical playboy of London. One interesting mystery, "As You Desire Me," by Luigi Pirandello, still up to his old tricks of insisting and almost proving that illusion is truth.

The Theater Guild produced the prairie play. Young Mr. Riggs has been knocking at the stage doors of Broadway for a year or more. He came first three years ago with a drama of adolescence, called "Big Lake," which was done well enough by an actors' school to win the pussyfoot compliment of being promising. He came again last fall with a poetic piece, called "Roadside," which Arthur Hopkins produced with such gustiness that it blew itself right out of the theater.

Whereupon the Guild, which had already bought "Green Grow the Lilacs," found itself facing the job of overcoming such doubts concerning Mr. Riggs as prevailed among professional playgoers and the little less than professional first nighters.

Prairie Songs to the Rescue.

The Guild, as you probably know, is good at meeting problems. It took Mr. Riggs' play, set back in the Indian Territory of thirty years ago, and expanded its scheme of incidental music into a series of interludes in which a crowd of real cowboys and ranch girls sing the old prairie songs. By doing this they pulled the simple and fairly trivial plot into a harmonious and colorful entertainment, much as the Negro spirituals tie the scenes of "The Green Pastures" together.

"Green Grow the Lilacs" is cut up into six scenes, and between them an old corral fence is stretched across the stage before which the cowboys and ranch girls gather to sing songs. They are those plaintive laments of the lone pa-rahtie, mostly, intermixed with such rollicking choruses as "I wish I was Single Again," and "Hello, Girls." "Home on the Range," "Strawberry Roan," "Blood on the Saddle," and the theme song, "Green Grow the Lilacs," are others.

Young Mr. Riggs is a poet and much of his dialogue is couched in those sweeping cadences that will mystify and perhaps disappoint the average realist who knows his west. A little highfalutin' this Curly McClain, who loves to hymn the moon

"Peter Ibbetson," Deems Taylor's New Opera, Opens in Gotham; Transformed from the Play

By Edward Moore.

BY the time these words are printed a new opera, "Peter Ibbetson," will have been given its first performance on any stage. It was billed for yesterday afternoon at the Metropolitan Opera house in New York.

"Peter Ibbetson" has been transformed from the play in which Constance Collier and the Barrymore brothers used to act into an opera by Deems Taylor. The names of Miss Collier and Mr. Taylor appear as coauthors of the libretto and that of Mr. Taylor as the composer. It is believed that Miss Collier was responsible for the dramatic form of the piece and Mr. Taylor for what changes were necessary to make it operatically workable.

Nothing was ever imagined less fruitful than an effort to predict in advance the success of a new work. The audience promptly makes up its own mind about things that the promoters and participants never dreamed of. On this depends the success or failure of the piece.

But "Peter Ibbetson" looks uncommonly good in its piano score. It is the kind of work that almost any one would feel justified in stepping out with as an artistic adventure, provided only that he has an artistic conscience and the courage to make such a step.

Reason for Confidence.

One reason why one takes confidence in Mr. Taylor is that he never, in his compositions or his public utterances, has enrolled himself among those who say that melody is a dead issue and that the music of the future is going to be made up of something better than mere melody.

One comes to distrust such statements. A fine melody is such a lovely thing, so uncommon, so inspiring when it comes, that it strains the imagination to think of a composer throwing away such an asset if he happens to have it. In fact, one begins to be assailed by an uncomfortable doubt whether the composer who scorns melody is not the composer who cannot write melody.

It is the same thing with singing. One hears, every once in a while, of an artist who "interprets" so marvelously that mere singing becomes a back number. Usually the admirers of such an artist add that if mere singing were in the least important that artist could sing like a bobolink with breast against the thorn, or St. Cecelia at the organ. Yet years go by and little is heard even approximating the bobolink or St. Cecelia. Again doubt raises its head.

Uses Concealed Chorus.

Mr. Taylor has tried to write melody and has frequently succeeded. Sometimes it is elaborate and involved, sometimes it is simple and borrowed. He has made much use of a concealed chorus. One scene shows Peter and Mary in the fantasy of "dreaming true" in their old garden in Passy, watching themselves as children and their families as young people, while the chorus carries on with French folk songs. Another is at the end of the piece, where Peter, old and in prison, takes leave of his body and goes up to meet Mary, again to concealed choral music. As this works out, it is one of the most touching episodes I have ever seen in an operatic score.

The piece needs good singing and is by no means dependent upon the dramatic ability of a single artist in a stirring scene. Mr. Gatti-Casazza

OUR TOWN

Paragraphs About Some Folks You Know

OUR travelling neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Moe Born of Glencoe, celebrated their golden wedding on Monday in Pasadena, Cal., where they are spending the winter. Pretty soft, eh—golden wedding, golden sunshine? O, well, some folks get all the breaks. Their daughters, Mrs. Harold E. Foreman and Mrs. Edwin S. Rosenbaum, and their son, Edgar Born, were present in Pasadena for the celebration. Son Alfred wished them many happy returns, but couldn't get away for so long a trip at this time.

* *

A news letter from De Land, Fla., tells us that Neighbors H. L. Lawrence and Mr. and Mrs. Louis F. Nafis of Evanston are wintering there. Among the other things they have been seeing are the speed trials of Capt. Malcolm Campbell in his Bluebird II racing car on Daytona Beach. Neighbors G. D. Smith and A. B. Becker and their good fraus are likewise in DeLand.

The party we really envy, though, is Frank W. Pearson, our townsman of 5555 Sheridan road, and his spouse, who left recently for two months in Honolulu.

Getting back to Chicago, we understand that Frank Kennedy, 6165 Winthrop avenue, has decided to do his sleeping in bed hereafter. Frank fell asleep while riding in a cab driven by Maurice Zukerman, and toppled off the seat, striking his head against a door. He was taken to Lake View hospital for treatment, but is out and about, now.

Junior Spalding, the 11 year old son and heir of Townsman William C. Spalding, 1436 Edgewater avenue, suffered a painful accident when his fine thoroughbred dog, which he was taking for a walk, was attacked by a stray dog. In trying to separate them, Junior was bitten on both hands.

WE hear that the buzz bus owned by F. W. Plaine, 5736 Kenmore avenue, began to burn up one day last week while making backfire. Prompt work by the fond owner [proving that he should wear red suspenders] saved the day and the bus.

Sixty friends and relatives gathered to help Mrs. Lina Deutsch, 7715 Marshfield avenue, celebrate her 75th birthday recently. Congratulations, neighbor! Mrs. Deutsch, by the way, is the mother of Mrs. G. H. Emin, 1039 Hollywood avenue.

Neighbor Leo Sweeney, 1738 Catalpa avenue, is happy these days because "It's a BOY!" Mrs. Sweeney isn't angry about it, herself, but she's not the one who has been passing out the cigars. Atta boy, Leo.

* *

The daughter of our good dominie, the Rev. C. Claud Travis, is home this week from De Pauw university where she finished the four year course in three and a half years. Good work, Josephine! We understand that the fatted calf was killed for the prodigy daughter. There's one drawback, however, as Josephine was so much smarter than the university is used to having its graduates that she won't receive her diploma until June, when she will return to take part in the commencement exercises.

IT'S now "Lieutenant," when addressing F. L. Phill, 2610 Potwyne place. He received his commission at the University of Illinois recently, and is now a full fledged military officer. Yes, sir, Lieutenant!

Their 20th wedding anniversary was celebrated by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wendt, 4248 Whipple street, with a theater party recently. Ten guests were present to wish Henry and the missus "many, many more."

* *

Mrs. Thomas O'Grady, our neighbor over at 4441 Damen avenue, has had an exciting [and costly] experience. Her purse, containing $15 in cash and a bracelet valued at $500, was snatched from her recently on Winchester avenue, and the thief was gone before you could say "Jack Robinson," which wasn't all that Mrs. O'Grady wanted to say.

* *

The talented young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Gillek, who dances under the stage name, Gene Gill, recently returned to their domicile at 1900 Warner avenue for a visit. Miss Gill, who is said to resemble Marilyn Miller, has been on a stage tour in the south, where she was accompanied by her mother, who designs her costumes.

GOOD morning!

Mister Eugene Walter's play again raises a warning hand. This time it voices its moral from the talking screen. Once more we are reminded that all is not gold that glitters, that bubbles we buy with a whole soul's tasking, that there's a broken heart for every light on Broadway, that poison is concealed in the flower of pleasure, that the woman pays and pays and that men are like that.

For a right smart time the picture merits praise for technical excellence and sophistication and finesse of acting. Then the script begins to drool, the director grows weakly sentimental, Marjorie Rambeau does a Laura Jean Libbey at East Lynne and the heroine is turned out in the snow on Christmas eve. True, she has no child in her arms, for Laura had known her eugenics. She reminds you of Emil Jannings in "The Way of All Flesh," and of Gretchen, the poor little match girl, without the matches, as she parks outside her respectably married sister's lighted window and wishes she had been good, too.

Remember the Story?

You're probably familiar with the story of "The Easiest Way." The title means the so-called Primrose Path down which turns one Laura Murdock. Not because she wants to, really, but because, figuratively speaking, baby needs shoes. Had Daddy Murdock been a proper sort of paterfamilias, why Daughter Laura need not have sinned.

When the story opens everybody is working but father—who has an easiest way of his own. Pop's path is bordered by gin bottles and paved with such money as he can wheedle out of his hard toiling, underpaid daughters, one of whom is engaged to a noble youth who drives a laundry wagon, and, I think, maybe, has an interest in the business. Anyhow, he loves Peg and Peg loves him and, ere long, they have a nice little house in the suburbs with a highchair and a baby, and a cold shoulder—so far as Nick is concerned—for Sister Laura, who by this time has listened to her boss' proposals and is sitting on fine cush-

Bootleg Record Trips Entrant in Council Race

Foes Dig Up O'Connell's Plea of Guilty.

CHARGES that Daniel J. O'Connell, candidate for alderman in the 49th ward and secretary to Chris Paschen, had been fined $100 in 1927 for selling liquor in a speakeasy, were made by political opponents of the aldermanic candidate last week and created a sensation in the 49th ward campaign.

O'Connell, the Thompson-city hall candidate in the race against Ald. George A. Williston, pleaded guilty to the bootlegging charge in federal court in June, 1927, records in the United States district attorney's office disclosed. He had been arrested for possessing and selling liquor in a speakeasy at 180 West Adams street.

Assistant District Attorney Edward Fisher, in verifying the charges, said the facts and records in the case showed conclusively that the aldermanic candidate was the same man involved in the liquor case.

Virtually Eliminates Him.

The disclosures of O'Connell's bootlegging record seriously affected his campaign and virtually left the field to Ald. Williston and William H. McKinley, former speaker of the Illinois house of representatives.

Williston is the candidate of the Deneen organization, whose leader in the 49th ward is Henry C. W. Laubenheimer, United States marshal. The 49th ward Lyle organization, recently formed with former Judge Harry F. Hamlin as its leader, also has indorsed Ald. Williston's candidacy.

Mr. McKinley has the support of the 49th ward Democrats. The remainder of the field is split up among several independent candidates.

The fight in the 48th ward is based on the attempt of Thompson's city hall machine to unseat Ald. John A. Massen, Deneen leader and foe of the administration, who was described by the Municipal Voters' league as the most valuable member of the city council.

The Thompson forces have organized in support of Maurice Leavitt, a hotel owner, who is directing his campaign toward rounding up the support of the 200 or more hotel men in the ward and the Jewish voters, who constitute more than 30 per cent of the population.

Massen Says Foes Spend Heavily.

Massen said his supporters had informed him that the Thompson group is supplying unlimited funds in behalf of Leavitt in their campaign against the alderman. Mr. Massen said he would engage in a vigorous campaign to defend himself and keep the Thompson forces from routing one of their enemies from the council.

The issue in the 47th ward race also is Thompson vs. anti-Thompson, with Ald. John J. Hoellen opposing M. J. Schmidt, the Thompson candidate. Charles J. Sachs, an automobile salesman, was the first to enter the race as the Thompson candidate, but he withdrew so that the city hall forces could throw their strength to Schmidt, who had entered the campaign with Democratic support. Ald. Hoellen, formerly identified with the administration forces, refused to go along with Thompson and instead aligned himself with the Lyle forces.

There is a concerted attack against Thompsonism in the 50th ward, where Ald. Curtis E. Mellin is seeking reëlection as the city hall candidate. James R. Quinn, whose candidacy was indorsed by the 50th ward Democratic organization, and Eli B. Herren, a former assistant state's attorney, are the principal opponents of the Thompson candidate.

WOMEN VOTERS INVITE 4 LEADING MAYORASPIRANTS

All four leading mayoralty candidates have been invited by the Uptown League of Women Voters to speak from the same platform Wednesday evening at the Rogers Park Woman's club. Judge John H. Lyle, Ald. Arthur F. Albert [43d], Anton J. Cermak, president of the county board, and Mayor William Hale Thompson are the candidates for mayor who have been invited to speak. In addition all aldermanic candidates from the 49th and 50th wards have been extended the opportunity to tell the voters their platform. Besides league voters members of 50 civic and business associations have been invited to attend the meeting.

Perfume's in the Air at Uptown Postal Station

The Uptown postal station has been an odoriferous and highly sweet smelling place ever since a gallon of perfume concentrate, being shipped by parcel post, broke in one of the mail bags. Too much of a sweet thing, however, soon proved to be more than enough for the 150 employés, many of whom had headaches and lost their appetites. The odorous oil had trickled out of the box containing the bottle, through the mail bag, and onto the floor. The bag was placed outside on the fire escape, but the atmosphere of the place was still like that of a perfume factory.

VOICE of the NORTH SIDE

Cozy Apartment Some Day Will Be Love Song Theme

Golden weddings are sufficiently rare to provide an occasion for celebration and an item of news. They carry an implication of achievement in human happiness. Announcement that a north side couple recently observed their 50th wedding anniversary in the first apartment building erected in the Uptown district, in which they have made their home for 26 years, also speaks a good word for this modern style of home. For there are still those who, clinging to the traditions of individual homes, have viewed the apartment building with alarm, associating the structure with startling divorce statistics.

True, the vine covered cottage gets all the best of it in the theme song, but the single dwelling has had a long start on the houses where neighbors live above and below and just across the court. Give the apartment time and it, too, may inspire the singer with a longing for perhaps "the light that shines from the third floor window" or "the one whose answering voice will be heard down the tube."

It is said that love flies out the window when poverty comes in at the door. This being so, the small home is put to the more severe test when the tax bill arrives, for its occupants often must puzzle and weep while the apartment dweller takes the blow indirectly.

As for golden weddings, may there be more of them. Be it an apartment or isolated home, Father Time permitting, it's the kind of folk who live under the roof, not the type of dwelling, that must be depended upon for the conjugal harmony that makes possible a fifty year honeymoon.

FRANKNESS AND MARRIAGE.

Perhaps as never before, open forums are attaining popularity among various neighborhood groups. One of these, the Young People's Community forum of the Evanston Y. M. C. A., has outlined topics for discussion to cover the next three months.

Interest in these groups is indicative of a divergence of opinion on certain questions which, in previous periods, were taboo for public discussion, particularly in mixed audiences. There have been eras when the platform speaker was allowed to have his say without any opportunity for a comeback by members of the audience. Many speakers, instead of being content with indifference or apathetic agreement of listeners, are now welcoming general discussion. There is less desire these days to set forth individual opinion as final. There are more thought and frankness.

One of the first topics to absorb the attention of the Evanston Y. M. C. A. forum is the old one of marriage, and among the angles will be discussion of "consideration of relatives before marriage" and "making sure of compatibility." Romance, in the past, simply has asked that the partner in prospect be either a hero or an angel. Although, said Lecky: "Power to soothe, to sympathize, to counsel, and to endure are the more important. It is by these alone that the married life attains its full measure of perfection."

But ideas on this subject and many other subjects vary, and those who have felt repressed through lack of opportunity to express their views are now enjoying an inning. Many voices are heard where it has been customary to let only one be lifted. The open forum has come to the relief of stifled opinions.

A NEIGHBORHOOD AND ITS THEATER.

The modern attitude of a neighborhood toward its theater is emphasized in North Town where the wishes of the business men regarding a name for the institution have been carried out by the playhouse management. As the result Nortown—a name that is euphonious and short will blaze in electric lights, thus impressing the locality upon the public consciousness as well as providing a magnet for amusement seekers.

Of such importance is the Nortown theater, now nearing completion, considered by the community that the neighborhood business men's organization is planning a spring carnival to be held at the time of the building's opening.

According to reports, motion picture earnings reached a peak during the last year despite the depression in so many other lines, and the influence of entertainment in combating mental depression apt to accompany that of an economic nature is generally appreciated. Folk have a way of best forgetting their own problems when diverted by those of the other fellow.

Such isolation as may have remained to outlying communities is further shattered by fine theaters which, in their film offerings, are the same as those to be found in the loop. North Town has reason to mark the opening of its new picture palace with a fitting community celebration.

HISTORY IN THE BIBLE.

From the Moody Bible institute comes word of a revival of interest in memorizing Scriptures. One woman is reported to have acquired during the fall term the ability to repeat 293 Biblical passages. Instructors at the institute consider renewed interest in the Bible the more remarkable because of the supposed reign of jazz.

If those who are learning to repeat the words of the Scriptures are also giving thought to their application to modern times, they will realize that jazz ages have come and gone throughout the world's history, and that just now there are signs which point to a waning of a period which jazz music has characterized.

They are aware of rulers of the long ago who thought more of their privileges than of their duties. They know what happened to nations when righteousness was asleep and of the ultimate penalty for soft living. They understand that the mere passing of years does not necessarily mean progress toward what is worth while and that smugness is often the signal of a state's downfall. To know the Scriptures is to understand modern life in its more important phases.

Jazz tunes express the mood of the moment. For so doing they may be worth a line or two on the page which records the era through which we have been passing. But posterity can hardly be expected to memorize the words that go with tunes so quickly morning a new one crowds off the air wearying the eardrums that each (the one that has been heard the night before.

DRESS UP STORE FRONTS, PLEA TO UPPER CLARK ST.

Empty Buildings Even to Be Brightened.

A campaign for brighter windows on Uptown Clark street is to be the first project of Carl J. Johnson, manager of the A. Johnson Coal company, who was recently elected president of the Uptown Clark Street Business Men's association.

The association will assist individual merchants along the streets in cleaning up their store fronts, and an effort will be made to have displays of various kinds put into the windows of vacant stores.

"There is little use in cleaning up and brightening up the windows of the stores that are occupied, only to have the vacant store spoil the general effect," Mr. Johnson explained. "We intend to convince the store owners that it is to their advantage to let us put these displays in."

Empty Windows a Handicap.

Some landlords, Mr. Johnson added, believe that the vacant windows advertise the fact that their stores are for rent, but overlook the fact that too many of these advertisements run their rents down by appraising the prospective renter that there is an excess of vacant property.

"What we intend to do," he said, "will not keep passersby from noticing that any of the stores is vacant, but will only keep the vacant stores from standing out so prominently and causing a generally unpleasant effect. The psychology created by blank, cobwebby windows is bad for rentals, bad for business, and bad for the appearance of the street in the artistic sense. Meanwhile, the windows of the rented properties are to be decorated, better lighted, and generally made cheerful. The store fronts around the windows are also to receive attention."

All members of the association are to have an equal chance of taking advantage of the extra display space that will be secured, Mr. Johnson promised.

Other Officers of Group.

Other officers who were elected to serve with Mr. Johnson are: Vice president, Dr. J. W. Lundstrom; treasurer, H. Erickson; secretary, G. A. Bodeen, and financial secretary, R. Ostengaard.

Directors of the association for 1931 are Dr. O. R. Engelmann, immediate past president; M. Friedman, Hyman Kinzelberg, Charles Abrams, J. H. Schloss, Edward M. Olson, George C. Gray, Edward Bergh, J. G. Barnes, Edgar Blitz, and A. Kiel.

The association will meet Wednesday noon at the Café Idrott, at which time the plans for the cleanup and brighten up campaign will be discussed.

SHAWNEE CLUB GROUPS TO HAVE BUSY VALENTINE

Plans are going forward for the celebration of the Shawnee Country club's second anniversary with a cabaret party on Feb. 21 and the next production of the Shawnee players on Feb. 27 and meantime all groups and age classifications are adding last minute touches to the various Valentine parties planned for the week.

A children's party will be held on St. Valentine's afternoon, next Saturday, featuring a large Valentine box. A program will be given and favors and refreshments will top off the party. For members a buffet dinner is planned for Thursday evening, followed by playing of hearts. Mr. and Mrs. Harry J. Richter are in charge of the evening, which will take the place of the usual progressive bridge game.

The younger members of the club are keeping secret their plans for an evening Valentine party next Friday. In charge of plans are Miss Frances Wallis, Miss Ruth Burchmore, Miss Dorothy Holway, Miss Josephine Balhatchet, Miss Emily Pribble, Miss Jeanne Kuhl, Miss Lois Wolfe, Miss Georgia Bettinghaus, Miss Betty Ellis, Miss Betty Fuermann, Miss Katherine Wenter, and Miss Janice Guthridge.

WED 55 YEARS

MR. AND MRS. G. W. ZEIGER.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Zeiger, 559 Surf street, recently celebrated their 55th wedding anniversary with a family gathering at their home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Zeiger were born in Berlin, Germany. Mr. Zeiger came to Chicago in 1866 and opened what is claimed to have been the first delicatessen shop in the city. Some years later he opened a printing establishment on Clark street just north of the river. In 1876 he entered the packing business, and is now president of the G. W. Zeiger company, packers, at 517 West Chicago avenue.

Three daughters were born to the couple. These include Miss Elfriede Zeiger, Mrs. Clara Z. Seyl of Gary, Ind., and the late Mrs. Adele Petersen. There are three grandchildren, Miss Clara Elfriede Seyl, Gebhardt W. Petersen, and William H. Petersen. Gebhardt Petersen is now at school in Dortmund, Germany, but the others were present to help the couple celebrate.

LIGHT AND SHADOW IN WABASH AVENUE

"Lights and Shadows" is the name of this picture, which won the $5 first prize in The Tribune's amateur photograph contest this week. It was taken by Alex Pietrowski, 927 Crescent place, and shows Wabash avenue looking south from the balcony of the Madison street elevated station.

John F. Hahn, latest candidate for mayor of Evanston, has the distinction of being a native born Evanstonian and a home town boy who made good in his own home town. Mr. Hahn was born in Evanston in 1867; his parents had settled there ten years earlier. He was educated in the public and parochial schools and his first job was with a wholesale hardware house.

In 1899 he was elected city clerk of Evanston, a position he held continuously for 26 years until 1925. In 1900 he started in the real estate business in a small way and is now president of the firm bearing his name, one of the largest general real estate firms on the north shore.

He was married in 1892 and has three children, John F. Jr., who was graduated from Dartmouth last June; Mrs. R. E. Williamson of Glencoe, and Mrs. Reginald Cooke of Evanston. Another son, Edmund F. Hahn, who served in the world war, died a few years ago.

[A biographical sketch of Mayor Bartlett, a candidate for reelection, will be printed next Sunday.]

WINNETKA DRAMA CLUB TO PRESENT 'SMILIN' THROUGH'

Thomas Ratcliffe Is Director.

The Winnetka Drama club will present "Smilin' Through" as its second production of the season. Mrs. Sherman Gibles, assisted by Thomas Ratcliffe, is directing the play, which will have three performances in Mats hall of Community house, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of this week.

Since the play is a costume play, with setting, costuming, and incidental music playing an important part, the production staff will have a heavy task. Mrs. William F. Brown is in charge of the sets and has painted the back drop. She is being assisted by Mrs. Ray Feagans in creating the elaborate garden scene.

Mrs. Ballard Designs Costumes.

Mrs. Roger K. Ballard, the president of the club, has designed and, with some assistance, executed the costumes for the period of 1870. Thomas Ratcliffe and Miss Clara Hirsch will furnish most of the incidental music.

Others assisting in various ways in the production are Mrs. Gross Williams and David Lasier.

Mrs. Plympton to Play Lead.

Most of the cast are well known figures in amateur dramatics on the north shore. Mrs. John A. Plympton essays the rôle made famous by Jane Cowl. Donald Morrison and Dr. Davies Lazear are the two old cronies.

Others in the cast are Mrs. David Kennicott, Mrs. John Lasier, Mrs. Harry Clarke, Thomas Ratcliffe, John Lasier, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Buck, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Bowen, Miss Katherine Flynn, and Miss Mary Williams.

Guild Plans Party.

A card party will be given by the Young Ladies' guild of Our Lady of Mount Carmel at 8:30 o'clock Tuesday evening in the school hall, 720 Belmont avenue. The party will be open to all north side residents.

SENN A CAPPELLA TO SUBSTITUTE FOR DAMROSCH

Chorus to Take Place on W-G-N, NBC.

The Senn High school a cappella chorus will receive an honor as yet not accorded to any other high school chorus in the United States when it will be called on to substitute for Walter Damrosch and his symphony orchestra on Feb. 27 in the regular Friday morning NBC music appreciation hour to be heard from W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, and the NBC coast to coast network.

NOBLE CAIN.

The chorus, which is directed by Noble Cain, will sing with an orchestra and band to be selected by NBC. It is composed of more than 400 voices, and is recognized by national music authorities as one of the outstanding choruses of the country, ranking higher than many university vocal groups. For the first five years the city contest was held Senn won the championship. Senn did not enter this year's contest.

Director of Festival Chorus.

Mr. Cain directed a chorus of approximately 5,000 voices in singing "The Messiah" at the final concert of the Chicagoland Music festival held in Soldiers' field before 150,000 persons last August. The music festival was conducted by THE TRIBUNE and 27 associated daily newspapers.

In the Senn Art guild exhibition held recently in Senn hall, Earl Laun and Don Miller won the all around awards for work entered. Members of the faculty were judges in the awarding of prizes.

Miss Betty McCord won first place in the oil paintings, and Laun was second. In the water colors, Miss Mary May, Laun, and Miss Virginia Jenkins won first, second, and third places respectively. In the pencil drawings, Miller, Miss Betty Shannon, and William Blinoff won the three first places in the order named, and Marion Mansbridge was given honorable mention. Ink drawings by Miss Jean May, Miss Gladys Poll, and Miss Millicent Yahnke won awards, and honorable mention was given to those by Wihr and by Miller.

A soap carving of the nativity by Miss Florence Audrew and wood carvings of monks by Laun took the prizes in the crafts group.

Puppets representing Raggedy Andy and a ballet dancer were made by Miss McCord and Otto Scheer. Miss Mary May won the award for batik work.

The exhibition, composed of a collection of the guild members' best work during the year, was under the sponsorship of Miss Nell Devine.

SNAP SNOW PICTURES AND FIRESIDE SCENES FOR TRIBUNE PRIZES

Winter is presenting the amateur photographer with hundreds of new suggestions for pictures these days. Familiar objects take on a fresh aspect under a garment of snow and ice. Winter sports and cozy fireside games offer a variant to the all year round recreations.

What more inspiring subject for the camera's eye than Jack essaying his first journey around the home pond on a pair of skates Santa Claus brought him! Or the whole family helping build the snow man before the freeze sets in, or making fudge and popping corn over the fire!

Take advantage of the cold weather while it lasts, snap a few of the dozens of pictures taking form around you every day, and send your photos in to Photo Contest, Metropolitan section, The Tribune. The editor of the Metropolitan section will award prizes of $5, $3, and $2 for the three best pictures submitted every week by amateur photographers on each side of the city and its suburbs.

The name and address of the person submitting the picture should be printed clearly on the back of each entry with the full name and address of each person appearing in the picture.

The editor's awards will be final. Please do not request that pictures be returned.

SMALL PARKS CAGE TOURNEY ON TOMORROW

Each park is limited to a squad of eight boys in each division, allowing only three substitutes to a team throughout the tournaments. The tournaments are of the double elimination type, in which a team must be beaten twice in order to be eliminated. The losers of game No. 1 and game No. 2 play each other in game No. 4, and in the final game the winner of the unbeaten teams plays the winner of the consolation bracket.

The tournament for the 95 pound division will be held at Lake Shore playground, Lake Shore drive and Chicago avenue. Teams in the 105 pound division will play at Welles park, Montrose and Western avenues. The 115 pound division tournament will be held at Seward park, Sedgwick and Elm streets. Hamlin park, Wellington and Hoyne avenues, will be the scene of the 125 pounders' struggle for the championship, and the 135 pound division leadership will be decided at Chase park, Ashland and Leland avenues. A weight concession of ¼ pound will be allowed in each division. The finals in all weight divisions will be held at Chase park on Feb. 18 and 19.

First round games will be played at each of the five parks tomorrow night, second round games on Wednesday night, third round on Friday night, third round on Saturday night, and semi-final round on the night of Feb. 16.

BREAK GROUND FOR $475,000 SCHOOL TODAY

Bryn Mawr Av. Structure Ready in Year.

Relief for overcrowded conditions at the De Witt Clinton and Budlong schools is to be given through construction of a new elementary school at Bryn Mawr avenue and Mozart street, according to Ald. Curtis F. Mellin [50th]. Contracts for the new school, which is to cost $475,000, were approved by the board of education at a meeting last week.

Ground will be broken for the new school at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, with Ald. Mellin wielding the spade. Speakers include C. A. Becker, president of the Peterson-Woods Improvement and Protective association; James N. Kearns, president of the Arcadia Terrace Improvement and Protective association, and Joseph A. Lynn, president of the River Park board, all of whom have been prominent in the four year fight for school facilities.

Ready Within Year.

A representative of the board of education will likewise be present. The school is expected to be ready for occupancy within a year, according to Don C. Rogers, director of the building survey department of the board of education.

Herman D. Nelson, chairman of the building committee of the Peterson-Woods Improvement and Protective association, which has led a drive for the construction of the school, expressed satisfaction at the letting of the contracts.

"It will mean a great advance for this community," Mr. Nelson declared. "In the past people with children have hesitated to move into our locality because they had to send their children so far to school, across many dangerous streets. With this new school that difficulty will be solved."

Attention for Handicapped.

The projected school will have 18 classrooms, a gymnasium, and an auditorium. In addition, there will be two rooms for the teaching of handicapped children. There will be a library and a kindergarten, an office for the principal, and a teachers' restroom.

In accordance with the present policy of the board, the school will house a kindergarten and six grades, with the grades from the sixth to the ninth to be taken care of by Amundsen Junior High school.

SPONSORS TO SEE MODEL NURSERY IN OPERATION

Chicago Woman's Club to Visit Franklin School.

Children whose I. Q. has been carefully taken, whose behavior has been studied and formed under the latest behaviorist principles, and who have had the benefit of close attention by psychiatrists, will be inspected by the women who are responsible for it all, when the Chicago Woman's club visits the Franklin Nursery school, 226 West Goethe street, tomorrow morning.

The I. Q., or intelligence quotient, of these youngsters, whose ages range from 2 to 4 years, has been inspected, determined, graded, and recorded for the purpose of giving statistical data, special cases and hold consultations, special cases and hold consultations with the parents. This quotient, or numerical rating of the child's intelligence in various branches of perception, temperament, and reasoning, is used in deciding what methods and approaches shall be used in the school's main project, the formation of habits.

Demonstration to Be Given.

Members of the Women's club will be shown how to detect a high I. Q., a feeding problem, or a temper tantrum. Later, there will be a demonstration of habit training, showing how their own children can easily be taught to hang up their hats, put away their toys, and wash their hands cheerfully.

As a training center, the school coöperates with the Infant Welfare society, the Institute of Juvenile Research, and the Elizabeth McCormick Memorial fund, which agencies often recommend children to be taken into the school. This function of the school is the emphasized feature in its program, the laboratory data collected being important but incidental. The school, according to members of the Woman's club, is primarily for the benefit of the children, and serves the secondary purpose of affording material for psychological studies. It is sponsored and partly financed by the Woman's club, and the Winnetka Woman's club and was made possible by the coöperation of Miss Etta Q. Gee, principal of the Franklin school, who helped build a playground and equip it.

Mrs. Oberndorf Is Director.

Mrs. Howard Oberndorf is the director of the school, which has sixteen pupils at present, and Miss Ethel Wright is assistant director. Two cadets from the National College of Education, Evanston, supplement this staff, and psychiatrists are consulted regularly.

Mrs. Alfred Aischuler is the school executive of the Woman's club and a member of the Winnetka club and has been responsible for establishing the club's three nursery schools, one of which is on the south side. Mrs. Oscar Lowenstein is chairman of the nursery school committee of the Woman's club, and will conduct tomorrow's visit.

These children, it is explained, receive their first experience in habit formation in the favorable environment of the school. Habits as the basis of moral, emotional, mental, and physical stability; habits of order, cleanliness, and concentration; habitual thinking along lines based on interest in simple music and stories and care of plants; habits of proper eating, relaxation, and sleep, are all inculcated in the child as the school's first objective.

Sessions run from 9 o'clock in the morning to 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon, and include luncheon, mid-morning, and afternoon feedings and a two hour nap.

NORTH CENTRAL BODY AGAIN PICKS WINSTON AS HEAD

1931 Prospects Called Encouraging.

Bertram M. Winston was reëlected president of the North Central association at a meeting held Tuesday noon at the Mid Day club, First National Bank building. In a message to the members of the association, Mr. Winston pointed out achievements for the last year, and outlined a proposed policy for the coming year.

B. M. WINSTON. [Matzene Photo.]

"Looking to 1931, prospects are encouraging," Mr. Winston declared. "A program of improvements of vast benefit to the entire midtown section is under way. Courageous investors have not stopped building. Plans to meet the greater growth of our city and its myriad parts have not been halted."

Points Out New Attitude.

Regarding business depression, Mr. Winston said: "Most important, probably, is the awakened attitude of this entire nation to the basic causes of depression and unemployment. We may look forward to more intelligent planning in the future on the part of government and business to avoid the recurrence of the unsettled conditions which have accompanied the present post inflation period. Such planning will be our armor and protection for the future."

Mr. Winston complimented the association on its attitude throughout the last year. "There have been few times in the history of our association," he pointed out, "when the support of every business man and woman, property owner, and resident was of more importance than during the last twelve months.

Sounds Warning Note.

Sounding a note of warning, Mr. Winston continued: "We must realize that what has happened before is not wholly impossible now, and the need for coöperation, unity of purpose, and intelligent planning is as necessary in 1931 as it was in 1913 when this association was formed. In our own north central district we must guard against lapses from the standards of business we have set for ourselves. Through our active committees and executive staff, and supported by a strong membership, we have made great improvements during the last 12 months. In this same spirit we advance to the problems of 1931."

Other officers elected by the association for the coming year are: First vice president, Frederick M. Bowes; second vice president, James C. Cox; third vice president, John H. S. Lee; treasurer, William S. Kline; and secretary, Henry D. Sulcer.

3 Year Directors.

Directors elected for three years include Charles Watson, Judson F. Stone, William N. Pelouze, Harry F. Prussing, Gustave F. Fischer, W. H. Baldwin, and John R. Thompson Jr.

Directors elected for one year are Thomas G. Sexton, Francis E. Mainerre, William O. Green, Robert D. Lay, Oscar Mayer, and Chester A. Cook. Shaw, John T. Wheeler, Lawrence H. Whiting, and Murray Wolbach.

UNITY PASTOR

The Rev. H. Truman Gordon.

The Rev. H. Truman Gordon assumes his duties as pastor of Unity Lutheran church, 1216 Magnolia avenue, this morning. The Rev. Mr. Gordon comes to the north side church from Lake Nokomis Lutheran church of Minneapolis.

During his pastorate of 10 years that church had an increase in membership from 50 to more than 1,100. Under his direction an imposing edifice was erected in 1927.

As a Chautauqua lecturer and welfare worker, the new pastor is a well known figure throughout the central states. The Rev. Mr. Gordon toured ten European countries last summer, studying the economic, social, political and religious conditions. The Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon will reside at 5811 Ridge avenue until permanent quarters can be established.

PROPOSE BUSES LINKING N. SIDE, FAR NORTHWEST

Pave Caldwell Ave. at Once, Is Plea.

BY HAL FOUST.

Twenty-eight community organizations of the northwest side are petitioning the Cook county board for the immediate paving of Caldwell avenue from Cicero avenue to Touhy avenue with forty feet of concrete and the widening from twenty to forty feet of the pavement under contract on Devon avenue through the Caldwell forest preserve from Caldwell avenue to Milwaukee avenue.

The improvements are asked to provide a through route for a proposed extension of the feeder bus service as well as to accommodate east and west motor traffic. The buses would leave Sheridan road at Bryn Mawr and then use Ridge, Peterson, Caldwell, and Devon avenues to reach the western city limits.

Resolutions adopted by the community organizations point out that at present there is no through east and west route between Touhy and Lawrence avenues, a distance of three miles. The county plans to close Touhy avenue for paving this year, so the first east and west through route north of Lawrence avenue will be Oakton street, four miles north of Lawrence.

Devon Project Faces Delay.

The county is trying to obtain right of way to open Devon avenue, but this work will probably not be completed for two years.

The organizations that have subscribed to the petition to the county board are as follows:

Central Uptown Chicago association.
Edgebrook Manor Betterment association.
Edison Park Business Men's association.
Edison Park Kiwanis club.
Greater Devon Avenue association.
Greater Edgebrook Civic league.

City Pavement Called Temporary.

The county, in the spring of 1930, planned to pave Caldwell avenue with 40 feet of concrete. However, the street department of the city last fall laid an asphalt pavement on the avenue. This city pavement is described by the improvement clubs as "a makeshift asphalt top without any base whatever, which improvement of necessity is of a very temporary nature and cannot possibly withstand the very heavy automobile traffic for more than a few months."

"SWEDEN" FILM TO BE SCREENED AGAIN TOMORROW

The motion picture "Sweden," which was presented on Friday at Orchestra hall, will be presented again tomorrow for the benefit of the educational and philanthropic funds of the American Daughters of Sweden. The film presents the most colorful happenings in the Scandinavian countries during the last year, and gives scenes from the dramatic final chapter of the Andre polar expedition not previously shown in America.

Funds raised from the showing will be applied toward endowing scholarships which the society maintains for high school girls of Swedish blood who are honor students in the city high schools. These are awarded for the best essay on Swedish literature each year, the winner being allowed to matriculate in the university of her choice.

Among the objects of the club's charitable efforts are the Swedish Old People's home in Evanston, the Quentin Roosevelt chapter of Disabled American Veterans, and the Colony of Mercy.

PLAN LINCOLN PARTY UNDER WACKER DRIVE

Unemployed men in the North Central association temporary shelter on the third level of Wacker drive are to be given a Lincoln's birthday party at 6 o'clock Thursday evening. This was announced by William C. Calvert, executive secretary of the association.

"In order to build up the spirit of the men, there was a dinner party on Christmas day, and another on New Year's day," Mr. Calvert explained. "On Thursday, Lincoln's birthday, all those who have aided in carrying on this shelter are invited to attend another party."

Following a specially prepared dinner by Chef Steven J. Flaherty, a vaudeville show will be put on, free of charge. Four headline vaudeville acts have already donated their services, and others have signified that they will do so as soon as their schedules may be arranged.

A play reading group has also been formed in the Newcomers club, faculty wives who are newcomers to Evanston, under the chairmanship of Mrs. George Turnbull.

Mrs. W. M. Keeley is in charge of a group of husbands and wives who meet in the evening to read plays and two other groups hold luncheon meetings, one under the direction of Mrs. Scott Robinson at the Orrington hotel, and the other under the chairmanship of Mrs. A. W. Peake in Wilmette homes.

In addition to the smaller groups, there is a central group meeting once a month in the Art center. The February reading was given Thursday by Mrs. Helen Roseing, who read "The Man Is Possession."

Cartwright, Mrs. Eugene Garnett, Mrs. Samuel Sackett, Mrs. Edwin Mittelbusher, Mrs. Joseph Pearson, Mrs. Harrison B. Riley, Mrs. A. Starr Best, Mrs. Edwin F. Peirce, and Mrs. Virgil Hancher.

ST. LUKE'S NEW RECTOR TO BE HEARD MARCH 1

The Rev. Charles Eldredge McAllister, newly elected rector of St. Luke's Episcopal church, Evanston, will take up his residence in Evanston immediately after Easter, he has announced in a pastoral letter addressed to members of his parish. Dr. McAllister also announced that he will preach his first sermon at St. Luke's on March 1, and again will visit the parish on March 22, and that he will keep constantly in touch with the work of the parish during the intervening period.

Obligations in Baltimore make it impossible for the new rector of St. Luke's to assume his duties in Evanston permanently until after Easter, he stated in his letter.

Pastoral care—personal visitations upon members of the parish—and financial frankness with the members of the parish were stressed by Dr. McAllister as being two policies he intends to follow with vigor. He stated that only what in his opinion constitutes an emergency could lead him to accept the rectorship of St. Luke's after only two years as rector of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore.

WINNETKA ACTS TO KEEP FLAVOR OF VILLAGE LIFE

Lecture Series Planned for Newcomers.

A unique endeavor in shaping civic life and drawing residents into that life is to be attempted by Winnetka which has now attained a 12,000 population. The program is designed primarily to acquaint newcomers in Winnetka, those who have moved there in the last two to five years, with the traditions and ideals of the village, and to gain their assistance in shaping the future civic activities.

The campaign is to be launched through the presentation of three lectures and is supported by the leading residents and officials of the village, as well as the various civic and business organizations. It is believed to be the first time that any village in America has attempted an experiment of this nature.

First Lecture on Feb. 25.

A. Earl Bryson, chairman of the executive committee arranging the lectures, stated that in its preparation the committee found that there was almost a complete absence of studies on the spirit of village life.

The first lecture in the series to be given on Feb. 25 at Rudolph Matz hall in Community house, Winnetka, will deal with "The Organization of the Community Around the Child."

Edward Yeomans, nationally known educator and a resident of Winnetka prior to his establishment of a school in California, will deliver this lecture. On March 19, a second lecture on "The Spirit of Village Life" will be presented by Dr. Allen D. Albert, formerly of the University of Minnesota and now a resident of Evanston.

The third meeting scheduled for April will be a symposium entitled, "Whither Winnetka," to be led by three prominent Winnetka residents, and dealing with the particular local advantages and outlining a course of procedure for the future.

Seek to Preserve Community Life.

Dr. J. W. F. Davies, head of the Community house and father of the idea, in discussing the purpose of the symposium, said: "Some of us in Winnetka are anxious that the life of this village should not be overwhelmed by the ever approaching city. We do want to look ahead and if possible to give direction to the development of our own community life. We want to keep what is best and discard the things that ought to be discarded. We are not satisfied just to drift into what we may become."

On Mr. Bryson's committee in addition to Dr. Davies, are Miss Mary Williams, secretary; S. W. Bowles King, Charles J. Eastman, Mrs. E. V. L. Brown, Mrs. Marret Conway, H. A. de Windt, Mrs. Harry Gottlieb, Mrs. B. F. Langworthy, Mrs. John Vander Vries, Mrs. Carrie B. Prouty, William B. Moulton, Paul Hutchinson, Mrs. Aldred Alschuler, and Mrs. Walter O. Wilson.

DINNER STARTS SCOUT CAMPAIGN ON NORTH SHORE

Matthew Mills, former assistant attorney general, president of the Illinois Society of the Sons of the American Revolution and president of the Chicago Yale club, delivered the principal address at the opening dinner of the north shore and west north shore Boy Scout campaign Friday evening at the North Shore Congregation Israel synagogue, Glencoe. Three hundred volunteer workers from fifteen towns organized for the ten day solicitation.

R. Arthur Wood, president of the Chicago Stock exchange, presided, while J. D. Foster, campaign director, instructed the workers following a program of stunts and talks by Boy Scouts arranged by Myron C. Rybolt scout executive.

Towns represented by teams in the campaign, which is scheduled to close with a victory dinner at New Trier High school Feb. 17, are Lake Forest, Winnetka, Glencoe, Highland Park, Wilmette, Kenilworth, Indian Hill, Hubbard Woods, Bannockburn, Libertyville, Deerfield, Glenview, Northbrook, Highwood, and Mundelein.

Gen. Robert E. Wood is chairman of the campaign, with Albert D. Lasker vice chairman and Samuel Insull Jr. treasurer. The sum of $50,000 is sought to be used to liquidate obligations on the scout camp near Elcho, Wis., as well as to provide the 1931 maintenance budget.

POPE'S ADDRESS ON AIR IN U. S. NEXT THURSDAY

Hoover, Curtis to Speak on Lincoln Day.

BY LORENZ WOLTERS.

Lincoln's birthday will be the radio day of this week. Pope Pius XI. will open the powerful Vatican radio station on Thursday, the ninth anniversary of his coronation, with a talk addressed to the entire world. It will be the first radio address of the pontiff.

The broadcast is tentatively scheduled for approximately 9 a. m. central standard time over both major networks, and will include W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel.

Hoover, Curtis to Speak.

In the evening President Hoover will speak over both networks for a half hour beginning at 9 o'clock. His subject is announced as "Lincoln."

At 12:30 in the afternoon a program sponsored by the Lincoln Memorial university will be broadcast. Notable speakers who will pay tribute to the great emancipator during this presentation include: Vice President Curtis; Ray Lyman Wilbur, secretary of the interior; William N. Doak, secretary of labor; Ambassador Friedrich W. von Prittwitz und Gaffron of Germany, Minister Ferdinand Veverka of Czecho-Slovakia, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, and Ira Bennett, editor of the Washington Post.

Procedure for Broadcast.

Tests of the new Vatican City station, HVJ, indicate that its broadcasts will reach not only North and South America, but Australia as well. The short wave signals will be sent out from the two towers standing on the highest hill in Vatican City.

A network representative at Rome has announced the following procedure for the papal broadcast:

"The pope will be escorted from the vatican palace to the new station's portal, which is decorated in colored faience. The pontiff will be guided through the station by Senator Guglielmo Marconi, builder of the station, and Father Gianfranceschi, noted Jesuit electro-physicist who is president of the Papal academy. Father Gianfranceschi will explain to the pontiff the details of the powerful station and Pope Pius then will press a button starting the power.

Speak in Several Languages.

"Commentators, probably speaking in several languages, so that the greatest possible audience may have a clear picture of the scene, will depict the occurrences.

"The pope and his retinue then will pass in solemn procession to the papal academy building in the Vatican gardens where the solemn inauguration and observance of the anniversary of coronation will be held. Speeches will be made by Senator Marconi, Father Gianfranceschi and finally by the pontiff, who may also say a few words at the opening of the station itself.

"The ceremony probably will end with a benediction pronounced in Latin by Pope Pius—the first papal benediction to be heard by the faithful throughout the world."

With "Ten Cents a Dance" definitely out and "Just a Gigolo" in, announcers are having their difficulties with the French g's. Any evening will bring in a flock of pronunciations—"jiggle-o," "giggle-o," "chickle-o" and "chiggle-o." Inquiry at the French consulate reveals that the word cannot be done perfectly using English enunciation. The French "i" approaches our long "e." The initial "g" is pronounced somewhere between our "g" as at the beginning of George, and a "zh" sound, if there is such. The first "o" gets off with little stress. The second "g" is similar to our "g" sound as in wriggle. The final "o" as in "go." Now, if can't do it correctly go ahead and pronounce it as before.

To those who were unable to get to a radio last Wednesday night, it needs to be said that they missed hearing the Hallelujah chorus on the Sunkist musical cocktail hour.

"Mussolini, His Life and Works," will be discussed over a CBS network at 12:35 tomorrow afternoon by Guiseppe Castruccio, royal consul general of Italy. It is pointed out that Mussolini is "the most discussed figure in the world today." Gen Smedley Butler's trial opens a week later.

Maurice Chevalier is to receive, it is said, $100,000 for 26 radio appearances. The Frenchman starts collecting this week.

Britain's royal family was well represented before the microphone last year. King George and the prince of Wales had several world wide audiences. Queen Mary and Princess Mary were also heard. King George uses a gold microphone when speaking over the air.

DR. M. KRUMBINE WILL BE SUNDAY EVENING SPEAKER

"The Story of a Quitter" will be the subject of the address to be given by Dr. Miles H. Krumbine before the Chicago Sunday Evening club tonight. Dr. Krumbine is associated with the Plymouth church of Cleveland, O. Beginning at 7:30 p. m., the program will be broadcast through station WMAQ.

Dr. Ernest Fremont Tittle of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Evanston will open the preliminary services with an informal talk on "Treasures of the Earth."

The musical program will include an organ recital by Stanley Martin, a solo by Mrs. Mabel Sharp-Herdien, and several vocal selections by the choir. Lorado Taft will read the scripture.

VALLEE BAND TO BE HEARD FROM NEW ORLEANS

Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees, who are heard each Thursday evening through W-G-N and NBC, will broadcast this week's program from New Orleans. The celebrity for this broadcast will probably be selected from the local stars of the southern town. Rudy and the band expect to be in Chicago for a theater appearance Feb. 19 and expect to present a well known singer from the Chicago stage on this broadcast.

BRITAIN BUILDS NEW TOWER OF BROADCASTING

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON.—One of the sights of London in a few months' time will be the new headquarters of the British Broadcasting company—Broadcasting house. This is being erected in Portland place, near the famous Regent street thoroughfare.

The architect is Col. G. Val Myer, who has had no easy task to perform, for no building so large as this has ever before been erected in London on so small a space.

The center of the building, called the tower, contains 19 sound proof studios and a concert hall to seat 1,000 people. Running right round the studios is a corridor and on the outside of the corridor are the administrative offices.

The tower is built entirely of blue Staffordshire brick. The concert hall, vaudeville studio, and the effects studio are all provided with galleries where the public can be present. Magnificent offices are provided for the director general, with a balcony overlooking the whole of Regent street.

MARIA KURENKO TO BE HEARD ON W-G-N TONIGHT

Maria Kurenko, Russian coloratura soprano, will be featured from 8:15 to 9:15 tonight through W-G-N, the CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, and the coast to coast NBC network. Two numbers on the Kurenko program will be Lehmann's vivacious "No, Sir!" and the "Pierrot Song" by Samuels. The orchestra, under the direction of Josef Pasternack, will present several orchestral numbers including the old English ballad, "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes."

VALLEE "HELPED" CLARA, LU 'N' EM TO JOB ON W-G-N

Rudy Vallee may not know it but he helped "Clara, Lu 'n' Em" get into the air. When the Three Girls, Louise Starkey, Isobel Carothers, and Helen King, applied for a job at W-G-N the production manager, Harry Gillman, asked them to talk on something and when they asked for a subject he fired back "Rudy Vallee." And then Rudy was pulled over the coals. They talked so well about Rudy that they got a job then and there.

Pat Barnes Back with New Feature on W-G-N

There's joy unbounded in the listeners' camp, for Pat Barnes, one of radio's most popular artists, is back on the air at W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel. Each morning from 10 to 10:30 except Friday and Sunday Pat gives his sketch, "Jimmy and Maw," and Larry Larsen, W-G-N organist, plays the musical background. Jimmy is a lad about 14 and he and his mother are having some marvelous conversations. They're as human as only Pat Barnes can make them.

HOST ON TOUR

BOB ELSON.
[Ermates Photo.]

Bob Elson, one of the leading baseball announcers in the middle west, starts an interesting fifteen minute broadcast from 9:45 to 10 Wednesday night from W-G-N when he takes the listeners on a trip around the baseball camps with news flashes from the managers and gossip of just what's going on. The feature will be given each Wednesday night during the musical menu period.

Musical Menu Quartet

The Wanderers quartet, one of the leading group of singers on the air today, entertains from 9:45 to 10 each Monday night from W-G-N during the musical menu program. They are also heard on network programs.

All formerly vaudeville stars, they started singing together several years ago when by chance they were all billed at the same Chicago theater. Finding between acts that their voices blended well, the four men organized the quartet.

The name Wanderers, considering the lives of the four artists, is well chosen. Sam Thompson, first tenor, was born in Missouri and completed four years at West Point before giving up army life for the theater. Irwin Dillon, second tenor, is a Canadian and attended the University of Toronto. Philip Culkin, a native of Carthage, Ill., was educated at the University of Michigan, and Harold Blackwelder, basso, was born at High Point, N. C.

Gypsies to Play New Waltz Tune of England

"Blue Pacific Moonlight," a new waltz tune from England, by Wallace Herbert, will be played by the Gypsies during their broadcast over W-G-N, THE TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, and an NBC network at 7:30 tomorrow evening. Meyer's novelty number, "The Wedding in the Ark," will be sung by the male quartet.

Dr. Scott is the third prominent educational leader in the middle west to speak from W-G-N within the last few weeks on this subject. Recently Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, and Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, president of the University of Illinois, spoke.

CHICAGO TO BE WORLD'S RADIO CENTER BY 1933

NBC to Bring 50 Added Programs Here.

Another important step toward the fulfillment of the prophecy of M. H. Aylesworth, president of NBC, that Chicago is destined for first place in the realm of radio, has been taken. W-G-N, THE TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, is associated with NBC.

Official announcement was made yesterday by Niles Trammell, vice president of the company in charge of the Chicago division, that tomorrow the production of nearly fifty programs heretofore created in New York are now to originate in the new NBC quarters and studios on top of the Merchandise Mart. This will make a total of more than 200 programs broadcast from the Chicago NBC studios each week.

Chicago to Be Radio Hub.

The programs to be thus transferred from the eastern metropolis to Chicago are sustaining periods of entertainment heretofore transmitted over the nation-wide NBC-WJZ network.

The first step looking to the corroboration of Mr. Aylesworth's prediction came when NBC planned and erected in Chicago what is said to be the largest radio broadcasting plant in the world.

This second step anticipates the fact that in 1933, when Chicago holds its World's Fair, it will become, in reality, the general amusement center of the world.

A Complete Broadcasting Center.

It is also indicative of the fact that Chicago has been given a complete broadcasting center that is not merely a branch of the National Broadcasting company, but a major unit competent to handle in detail every phase of radio broadcasting.

During the last few weeks the Chicago NBC artists' bureau, program, music and production departments have been busy assembling artists and entertainers, arranging rehearsals and building the new programs that are to go on the air for the first time Monday.

Local outlets for all of the new programs have not yet been determined by the company.

LANDSLIDE FOR ROUGH RIDERS AT ROOSEVELT HIGH

Leonard Kahn Will Head Civics Club.

Leonard Kahn, a member of the Rough Riders party, was victorious over Seymour Simon, candidate of the Student Government party, for the office of Civics club president in an election held recently at Roosevelt High school. The Rough Riders, in fact, swept the slate, electing Stanley Bergson, vice president; Miss Helen Johnson, secretary, and Charles Erlenbaugh, treasurer. Two complete slates were put in the field by the Rough Riders and Student Government parties and an incomplete slate by the Blue and Gold Progressive party.

In the election of directors each of the two leading parties got one director on the board, the Rough Riders electing Nestor Flodin and the Student Government adherents coming through with Robert Marks.

Election Hotly Contested.

A tie resulted in the race for third place as delegate to the student council, with the result the four delegates may be sent to the council if no other solution is found. The successful delegates are Maurice Miller and Harold Levow, Student Government candidates, and Miss Florence Light and Miss Baker, Rough Riders.

The election was hotly contested, with the various parties issuing bulletins almost hourly and putting out "campaign literature" in favor of their respective candidates. During the lunch periods the candidates were introduced to the student body from the balcony of the lunchroom.

Miss Wexler Heads League.

Other Roosevelt organizations are likewise preparing for a full schedule of activities this semester. Miss Ellen Wexler was unanimously elected president of the Roosevelt Jewish Youth league. Other officers are Miss Leah Dushkin, vice president, and Miss Ruth Ben-Amy, secretary. The treasurer and the student council delegates are to be elected soon.

The Girl Reserves elected Miss Helen Friedrick president for this semester and Miss Vernette Johnson vice president. The secretary, Miss Ruth Hollenbeck, and the treasurer, Miss Miriam Gronberg, will continue in their offices.

Modern drama will be the subject of the Readers' club meeting this semester, it was decided at a recent gathering of the group. One or two dramatists will be discussed at each meeting. A committee consisting of Miss Dushkin, Miss Fanny Levatin, and Miss Ruth Benjamin was appointed to draw up a program for this semester. Another committee, which is to write a constitution for the club, includes Miss Ben-Amy, Miss Lillian Silver, and Miss Sarah Goldsher.

Schultz Heads Hi-Y.

The Roosevelt Hi-Y recently elected its officers for the new semester. Raymond Schultz was elected president. Other officers chosen with Schultz are: Vice president, Robert Noland; secretary, Raymond Kotz; treasurer, Edward Applegren.

Miller has been chosen to represent Roosevelt in the north section contest for the Union League club oratorical championship test.

REV. D. A. LORD TO GIVE TALK ON 'GREEN PASTURES'

"The Green Pastures," Marc Connelly's dramatic portrayal of "a white man's idea of a Negro's conception of heaven," which has been running in New York City for two years, will be the subject of an address by the Rev. Daniel A. Lord, S. J., tomorrow evening at the Loyola Community theater, Lakewood and Loyola avenues.

This play, which was awarded the Pulitzer prize of 1929, has been widely criticized both favorably and unfavorably throughout the dramatic and religious worlds, according to the Rev. Fr. Lord, who has used the play as the theme of many addresses during the last year. Clifford G. Ryberg, business manager, reported that the theater had received many north side requests for a discussion of the play by Father Lord.

On Feb. 16, Douglas Malloch, Chicago poet, will discuss "Husbands and Wives" in a lecture which is a part of the theater's major program.

Neighborhood Theaters

"Lightnin'," which opened Friday at the Riviera theater, presents Will Rogers as we like to see him in his natural habitat. Mae Tinée gave the picture three stars. Those who saw Frank Bacon play Lightnin' Bill Jones may be disappointed because Will doesn't try to pattern his performance after Bacon's, but those who like Will for himself will be satisfied. We're glad to see him back home, after being toted to Paris and London.

WILL ROGERS.

In the story, Will's wife [Louise Dresser] owns a hotel on the California-Nevada state line, which caters to divorcées who wish to establish residence in Nevada while having their mail sent to a California address. Slick, eh? But there is a city slicker.

This slicker [Jason Robards] tries to swindle Mrs. Jones into exchanging the hotel for some fake stock. The conflict arises when Lightnin' Bill refuses to sign the deed. Things look tough for Will, who leaves home, and there is a divorce scene that is truly touching. People all around us dabbed their eyes. We noticed it, because our own handkerchief was stuck. Joel McCrea and Helen Cohan [George M.'s daughter] do some fine supporting work, while Frank Campeau is funny as the sheriff who is forever on a still hunt for Joel.

Nifty Dancing in "Sunny."

"Sunny," playing at the Julian theater tomorrow on a double bill with "Sin Takes a Holiday," was given two stars by Mae Tinée. It features Marilyn Miller, who plays the part of a Swiss circus girl who comes to America. Marilyn does some nifty dancing, and is vitual good to look upon. Joe Donahue, brother of the late Jack, plays the rôle his talented brother starred in on the stage. He has mastered a surprising number of his brother's mannerisms, but Jack was such a favorite that it seems almost irreverent to speak of any one's approaching his justly famed dancing skill. We are afraid there will never be another, and Sunny, even with Marilyn, is dimmer without him.

It's Marlene Dietrich.

Morocco may men leather to some people, but to the patrons of the Uptown theater this week, it means Marlene Dietrich, in large quantities. Not that the new German talkie star is large, but rather that she is prominent in the picture and goes through some of her scenes slightly a scanty. "Morocco," which opened at the Uptown on Friday, is packing them in, and we suspect that it is largely on account of the scantiness of Miss Dietrich's attire somewhat overfeatured in the billboards. Or it may be because Mae Tinée gave the picture three stars. We go for Marlene and her husky voice in a big way.

Here Are Two Stalwarts.

"Min and Bill," featuring those two stalwarts, Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery, opens at the Buckingham theater today for a two day run. Mae Tinée three starred the film, in which a river front dive is the chief locale, and river rats and beer cats the principal characters. Min, hardboiled but with a heart of gold, is credibly and creditably portrayed by Miss Dressler, while Bill, her man, is played by the intriguing Mr. Beery. Nancy, the girl whom Min tries to protect, is acted by Dorothy Jordan, and Stella, her heartless mother, by Marjorie Rambeau.

Here's Charlie Butterworth.

The Granada is featuring "Illicit," for adults only, this week. The film is a gay one, in which Barbara Stanwyck and James Rennie appear as playmates outside the holy bonds of "I Do." Mae Tinée judged it at three stars' worth of entertainment. Of this, Charles Butterworth is responsible for a great percentage. His well known stone face puts the gags over as usual. Miss Stanwyck's pleasing person and personality are responsible for most of the remaining kick.

Two Triples and a Double.

Three attractions will be featured at the Teatro del Lago, in No Man's Land, this week. "Just Imagine," with El Brendel, is on today and tomorrow, a picture that deals with the fantastic and includes a trip to Mars. Mae Tinée gave it three stars. "Fast and Loose," another three star picture, feature Miriam Hopkins, who made it while playing in "Lysistrata," will be on the screen Tuesday and Wednesday. "Sunny," given two stars by Miss Tinée, will be seen Thursday and Friday. "Sunny" features Marilyn Miller and is a frothy story of a little Swiss circus girl who stows away on an America-bound ship.

Campbell is president of the association.

VOTE EVANSTON BUDGET; TAXES TO YIELD $1,562,000

With minor changes amounting to slightly more than $1,000, Evanston's budget for 1931 was passed by the city council at its meeting Monday night. The changes affect the war veterans, lowered because of the fact that the G. A. R. contingent is smaller, and the certificate fund.

The total appropriation for the city is $2,202,685.99. The figure that most interests Evanstonians, however, is the amount to be raised by taxation—$1,562,367.63. While the entire budget is more than $296,000 less than that of last year, the amount to be raised by taxation is $6,000 less. The cause pointed out is a lowering of income on special fees, particularly building fees, which generally swell the amount that can be paid for without taxation.

Specific appropriations include $1,355,749.40 for general corporate purposes. Appropriations for some of the departments are: Sewer, $28,106; public buildings, $36,545; fire department, $221,870; police department, $322,216; legal, $18,300; health department, $51,678; street and bridge, $256,294; small parks, $191,863. The miscellaneous fund is now $146,760.40.

DEPARTMENT STORE

. . . As you know, we have now been represented in this section consistently since its origin. Because of the size and intensity of its circulation, we believe it is an ideal medium not only for reaching our present customers but also for attracting many new people to the store and neighborhood . . .

Joseph D. Madigan

Vice-President, Madigan Brothers.

CANDY

. . . The candy business is always good at holiday time, but this Christmas it was better than we had ever known it to be, and we are convinced that our Sunday Tribune advertising is largely responsible. . . . With the Metropolitan Section, we are able to reach just the people we want, at a cost that makes our ads pay for themselves as they run. . . .

Julia C. Stevens

President, Mrs. Julia C. Stevens, Inc.

RADIO

. . . Needless to say, we have found the Metropolitan Section of the Sunday Tribune a great advertising medium. Before you started it the big merchant had a great advantage over the small retailer in the outlying districts, but now we feel that through this section of your paper we have just as good a chance to compete as the larger concern. We traced a sales increase of 119% to this section. . . .

Proprietor, Boller Piano Company.

CLEANING & DYEING

. . . We can truthfully say that our advertising in the Metropolitan Section of the Sunday Tribune has increased our business at least 50%, and in addition has expanded our sales territory to include many neighboring towns . . .

Proprietor, Woodlawn Cleaners and Dyers.

BANKING

. . . The recent half-page advertisement of the Citizens State Bank of Chicago, in the Metropolitan Section of the Sunday Tribune, was somewhat of a departure in bank advertising—particularly the advertising of an outlying bank. . . . This advertising . . . met our expectation in every way and was so wholly satisfactory in results that we are committed in considerable measure to this method in placing future newspaper advertising. . . .

Vice President, Citizens State Bank of Chicago.

FURS

. . . Our August Fur Sale was greater by 25% this year than the year before, and total sales compared with the same period of 1929 are 20% ahead of last year. Taking into consideration that the price of furs has dropped considerably, making the unit of sale much lower, we believe this to be an unusual record . . .

J. Einhorn

Proprietor, J. Einhorn, Furrier.

MILLINERY

. . . The largest number of customers this business had under the original owner was slightly over three thousand. So far this year, in spite of the poorer business conditions, the Tribune has brought me more than 2,400 new customers. Of this number, all but about 400 have come back to make at least a second purchase. Some have come back as many as five and six times. . . .

C. A. Loewen

Proprietor, C. A. Loewen, Millinery.

with

Metropolitan Section Advertising

REGARDLESS of the size of your business, whether you employ a hundred sales people or do all the work yourself, you can make more money on your present capital and from your present efforts, by advertising in the Metropolitan Section of the Chicago Sunday Tribune.

The Metropolitan Section was started four years ago to serve a double purpose:

1. To provide a "hometown newspaper" which would reflect the interests of the people living in Chicago's thriving neighborhoods.

2. To provide an advertising medium through which Chicago's neighborhood merchants and retailers could build up their sales at low cost.

Today the Metropolitan Section is one of the most thoroughly read and closely followed parts of the Sunday Tribune.

Today scores of merchants and retailers, both large and small, can testify to its ability to build sales and increase profits at low cost.

Above are excerpts from letters which some of these users of Metropolitan Section advertising have written to the Tribune.

Note who these advertisers are, what kind of businesses they conduct. Note that some of them have large stores and that some have small.

Then note what all of these advertisers say. Regardless of the amounts of capital these enterprises represent, all of them testify to the success they have had with Metropolitan Section advertising.

Why don't you get the complete facts about this business-getting method which so many others are using with increasing profit? It won't obligate you in any way whatever to call Superior 0100 tomorrow and ask for complete information about Metropolitan section advertising. Decide now to make this call!

Back to Stage Come Stars of Cinema Fame

Eugene O'Brien, Vilma Banky, Rod La Rocque.

By Charles Collins.

She is more than another pretty actress; she is a great beauty, and they are rare. Moreover, she is not of the flaunting type; she wears her golden perfection modestly. Miss Banky is physically a notable acquisition for the stage in this winter of its discontent; and as a comedienne her style is graceful. Her accent, which is probably the reason why her career in the talkies has halted, is a pleasant suggestion of her Viennese origin.

As for Mr. La Rocque, he rescues his rôle from the fatuity with which the "great lovers" of comedy are cursed by an attractive vein of boyish humor. He goes about the heavy business of infallible seduction with a kind of collegiate jollity, and neatly wins his spurs as a comedian. There appears to be a sense of humor on both sides of the house of Banky-La Rocque, and the wedded co-stars carry off their reincarnation with notable charm.

B'way Openings

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Five premières will mark a mid-winter spurt in theatricals along Broadway next week. Katharine Cornell leads the list with her staging of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," which gives her the rank of actress-manager.

"The Barretts of Wimpole Street"—Opens tomorrow night at the Empire theater. This is Katharine Cornell's new play, and also the reigning success of the London season. Rudolf Besier is the author, and the star's supporting cast in a production that has been staged by Guthrie McClintic will include Brian Aherne, Charles Waldron, Margaret Barker, Joyce Carey, Dorothy Mathews, John D. Seymour, and John Buckler.

"Dr. X"—Opens tomorrow night at the Hudson theater. A mystery play; one of its authors is Howard Warren Comstock, who wrote "Stepping Sisters." Among the players will be May Yokes, Howard Lang, Eden Gray, J. W. Austin, Florence Shirley, and Barry MacCollum.

"America's Sweetheart"—Opens Tuesday night at the Broadhurst. A musical comedy which is said to treat the films in satirical fashion. It is the work of the reunited Rodgers, Hart, and Fields trio. It brings Schwab and Mandel back to the producing field, and the out-of-town reports are excellent. In the company will be Jack Whiting, Jeanne Aubert, Gus Shy, Inez Courtney, John Sheehan, and Harriet Lake.

"She Lived Next to the Firehouse"—Opens Tuesday night at the Longacre theater. It carries this department's favorite title for the season of 1930-'31. The play is a farce by William A. Grew and Harry Delf, and Victor Moore, Lawrence O'Sullivan, Ara Gerald, William Frawley, Roger Gray, and Lotta Linthicum will be in it.

"Hobo"—Opens Wednesday night at the Ritz theater. A play by Frank Merlin, and the second production from the workshops of the suddenly active James Elliott. Paul Kelly will have the leading rôle. Others in the cast will be Gwyn Stratford, Dudley Clements, Joseph Sweeney, Valerie Bergers, Josephine Evans, and Victor Killian.

"SKETCH BOOK" GIRL

LORNA RODINOFF

'Show Boat' for Spring Revival, Says Ziegfeld

News and Gossip from Stage Headquarters.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Mr. Ziegfeld confesses that he is flirting with the idea of a spring revival of his gorgeous "Show Boat" production in order to put the New Amsterdam theater back into commission. He thinks that he might be able to engage Norma Terris and Edna May Oliver for it, and to put Helen Morgan back in her original rôle. If he can't get Charles Winninger for the rôle of Cap'n Andy he will send out a call for W. C. Fields.

Mr. Ziegfeld also says that he will not go ahead with his new "Follies" until he has all the songs and sketches ready for study by his stage director, and that may be a matter of six or eight weeks. Furthermore, he testifies that Ruth Etting is the only player thus far engaged for participation in said "Follies." As for the amount of money which he lost on the defunct "Smiles," Mr. Ziegfeld mentions $238,000; and if you don't believe it, you should see his face when he refers to that painful subject.

There were only two new shows on Broadway this week, and both of them will end their lives tonight. "In the Best of Families" had eight performances at the Bijou, and "Rock Me" tallied seven at the Royale. . . . Other departures of this week-end are "Midnight," which lasted only through the Theater Guild's subscription period, and "Bird in Hand," in revival, which is going out on another tour.

The week of Feb. 18 will bring a clutter of first nights, most of them scheduled for Monday. They include: "Heat Wave," an English play with Basil Rathbone as its star; "The Venetian Glass Nephew," an intimate musical show which is entered in the crazy title competition of the year; "Who Are You?" formerly called "Annabelle's Ancestors," with Otto Kruger at the head of its cast; a revival of the dramatization of Theodore Dreiser's "An American Tragedy," and a French version of "Topaze"—or, rather, the original "Topaze" played by a French company.

Ben Hecht and Charles McArthur promise to have their new play finished this month, but Jed Harris will not stage it before next August. This opus is said to deal with Broadway theatrical characters, probably in the "Once in a Lifetime" style of satire. Its central figure is a theatrical producer, and all the action takes place on the Twentieth Century Limited.

Some fellows have all the luck. Here, for instance, is an obscure playwright named John Patten Russell, who back in 1929 wrote a comedy for two characters, appropriately called "Two Is Company." It hasn't been staged yet. But Mr. Russell has received about $6,000 for it in advance royalties and option fees paid by managers who thought they would like to stage it and then changed their minds. The list of donors includes George W. Lederer, George Gatts, the Shuberts, William and Brady, and George Jessel. The latter paid Mr. Russell $50 for the privilege of thinking about "Two Is Company" over night.

Broadway thinks that the elusive rascal called Prosperity took a peek around his celebrated corner—one long peek, at least—on the last two days of January. Anyway, they are marked on the box office sheets as having carried the best general theatrical business of the season.

Preston Sturges, who struck it rich with "Strictly Dishonorable," is hard at work on another play. He's going to call it "Millions and Millions." . . . Arthur Hopkins is said to be keenly interested in a manuscript submitted by Norman Anthony, editor of Life. . . . Francine Larrimore seems to have abandoned "Storm Song"; at any rate, she is going to Palm Beach for a rest.

Great Nicola; Magician

THE Great Nicola will bring his company to the Studebaker beginning Sunday, Feb. 15. He is a magician and illusionist of more than twenty-five years' experience, practically all of which has been obtained in the theaters of Europe, South America, Africa, and the orient. He has been a world traveler almost continuously since he was befriended by Lois Fuller, the dancer, who obtained an engagement for him in a French vaudeville theater at the Paris exposition. In 1927 he was the headliner for one week at the Palace theater in Chicago, giving for his vaudeville engagement a few of the features of his full length performance.

In the show which the Great Nicola is bringing to the Studebaker he incorporated all the principal feats of the program with which he has just completed a two years' tour of the Hawaiian islands, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India, and Java. Assisting Nicola will be the same performers, mostly girls, who appear in his illusions and feats of magic during his recent two years' tour. During the engagement, Nicola will impersonate various foreign magicians he has met during his travels, including Ching Ling Foo, the Chinese conjuror, and Hassan Bux, dean of Hindu wonder workers.

New in Chicago

MARIKA COTOPOULI, an actress-manager from Athens who has often been called the foremost tragedienne of modern Europe, will appear at the Studebaker theater tonight and tomorrow night, giving performances in her native tongue. This evening she will present a version of the classic Greek tragedy, "Elektra." Tomorrow night she will give a modern play called "Stella Violanti." Prominent Greek-American citizens are sponsoring these performances.

Miss Cotopouli recently had a New York engagement and was highly praised by the Broadway dramatic critics. She has also appeared in Boston. Hugo von Hofmannsthal, a distinguished German dramatist, is the author of the version of Sophocles' "Elektra" which she will offer tonight.

Burton Holmes, veteran travel lecturer, will begin his annual engagement at Orchestra hall next Wednesday evening. His topic will be "Rejuvenated Rome." The lecture will be repeated Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. Then will come, in successive weeks, "Oberammergau and the Passion Play of 1930," "The North African Tour," "The Grand Tour of Europe" and "Imperial Abyssinia." This is Mr. Holmes' thirty-eighth year on the travel lecture platform.

Vox Playgoer

(To the dramatic editor:)

CHICAGO, Feb. 3.—I really have very little use for a collection of "pot-bellied African idols" which you offer for the name of a colored actress competent to play the title rôle of "Scarlet Sister Mary." (I have a large framed picture of Jules Bledsoe). But I've worked with Rose McClendon (in "Abraham's Bosom"), and I know that Rose's Mary would make Ethel wish she'd tried the title rôle in "The Unborn Child."

BOB WHITE.

Note by dramatic editor: H. L. Stanton of the Chicago Sunday Bee supplies the names of these colored actresses as eminently qualified for Miss Barrymore's rôle in "Scarlet Sister Mary": Evelyn Ellis, who appeared in "Porgy"; Rose McClendon, also of the "Porgy" cast; Edna Thomas, Abbie Mitchell, Cleo Desmond, Susie Sutton, and Jacky Mabley.

Play Tournament.

The ninth annual national Little theater tournament for one act plays will be held during the week of May 4 in New York. The following week the second annual long play contest for the Theater Arts Monthly cup will be held. Walter Hartwig is managing both tourneys.

and the stars and the clean breezes that sweep the range. But there is a fine spirit of wholesome earthiness, even about the jesting of the charivari crowd. These are men who live with nature and animals and their facts of life are nothing to be sneered at.

The performances are all good. June Walker playing Laurey with plaintive earnestness, Franchot Tone holding Curly to a fair blend of heroics and poetics, Helen Westley doing her gingham best by Aunt Eller, and Richard Hale making Jeeter the sort of sneak Jeeter has to be to point the villainy.

Back in 1900.

Thus, on a gusty summer's day in 1900, we have Curly McClain riding into the ranch of Aunt Eller Murphy and casting his lofty sombrero and his singing heart at the feet of Aunt Eller's niece, Laurey Williams. A marriageable orphan is Laurey. Nor is she displeased by these attentions, though she would like to be coaxed a bit.

The hired hand on Aunt Eller's ranch is a black browed fellow named Jeeter Fry. He, too, has cast an eye in Laurey's direction and he plans either to have her or to be most goshawfully revenged if his plans are thwarted. Jeeter has thought about it a good deal, being the sort of fellow who lives in a smokehouse decorated with pictures of nude ladies clipped from the Police Gazette.

So, there you have the foundations of as simple a plot as any picked out of fiction since Plautus wrote and Terance giggled. As it come about, Laurey goes to a dance at old man Peck's with Jeeter, just to bedevil Curly. But at the dance she becomes frightened of Jeeter and calls Curly to her aid. They become engaged that night and are married during the intermission.

But when they try to sneak back from the village into their house with their romance and their marriage license, the cowboy gang hides in the hay field for a charivari. Rudely the boys haul Laurey out of the house in her nightgown and set her on top of a haystack and hurl rough jests at her.

And when Jeeter tries to add to the warmth of the occasion by setting fire to the hay, Curly breaks from his captors and fights him. Jeeter is stabbed to death that night and Curly McClain is run off to jail.

Curly escapes next day, pursued by the cowboys, now become deputy sheriffs. But they let him stay escaped. After all, a bridegroom who has spent one night in jail with his bride weeping her heart out at home has suffered enough. Next day in court he can probably prove that Jeeter was not stabbed, but really fell on his own knife.

From Sunflower to Orchid.

As far removed as London's Mayfair from Oklahoma is Coward's "Private Lives" removed from "Green Grow the Lilacs." The one a hothouse orchid among plays, the other a Kansas sunflower. Naturally they appeal to and attract different publics.

The crowd that saw Mr. Coward's comedy Tuesday night was ermined to the throat and bejeweled to the elbows. And it simply loved the play. Partly because it is good boudoir fun, and partly because it is played mostly by Mr. Coward in person and Gertrude Lawrence. Both are social favorites with the Broadway aristocrats.

"Private Lives" is probably the flimsiest comedy farce ever written. It literally has but a single situation endlessly repeated. And yet it seems quite as endlessly amusing. This, I suspect, is due largely to the fact that it was written to fit the author and Miss Lawrence. With dull, witless, lackluster personality engaged in its joustings, verbal and physical, it would probably prove an awful bore.

The one situation then is that of the divorced Elyot and Amanda, who meet five years after their separation the first night of their respective second honeymoons. Elyot has married Sibyl and Amanda has taken Victor.

Between cocktails and dinner, while the moon is caressing the Mediterranean and a silly orchestra is continuously playing the sentimental "Some Day I'll Find You," Elyot and Amanda discover each other and know ten minutes later that they are making a second terrible mistake. As frequently as they may have fussed when they were married, they are certainly chemical affinities or something and are still crazy about each other. So they pack their suitcases and bolt.

Tempestuous People.

The next week they spend joyously in Amanda's Paris flat, alternating loving each other desperately and quarreling outrageously. Occasionally the day we spend with them, which is at the end of the week, they break into song. Occasionally they take to throwing sofa cushions at each other. And finally they become so infuriated over nothing much that they literally wreck the flat. They have just knocked over a couple of lamps, rolled over the davenport, and are on the floor, clawing at each other, when Sibyl and Victor look in upon them.

The next morning some sort of an adjustment must be made. Will the abused Sibyl and Victor take them back, should they want to go; or will it be necessary to go through with divorce proceedings?

The four, still bitter, sit down to as amusing a breakfast scene as you may well imagine, though it would read like nothing at all. It is during the attempted adjustment that Victor and Sibyl also begin quarreling in their defense of Amanda and Elyot. That is too much for the guilty pair. So they quietly take up their suitcases and run away again.

It is great fun for the sophisticates, this "Private Lives" publicly exposed. Mr. Coward has limited the run to three months, which was all it was played in London. Probably because that is as long as he and Miss Lawrence can stand the pace of it. It will, I would say, easily run out its three months here.

Mr. Pirandello's mystery, "As You Desire Me," is fairly heavy entertainment and likely to be none too popular, so far as I can see. It is builded again on that familiar Pirandello theme that illusion is truth and truth illusion. It follows the general mood of "Six Characters in Search of an Author" and "Right You Are If You Think You Are."

The situation in this instance exposes the recovery of Lucia Pieri, the beautiful wife of an Italian, who had been violated and torn from her home during the great war. For ten years her husband and her friends have searched for her. Now the painter who had done her portrait when she was a bride recognizes her as a dancing wanton in a Berlin cabaret and begs her to come home.

At first Lucia denies her identity. She is convinced that the very soul of Lucia Pieri has fled the body she has defiled. It would be impossible for her to reclaim any part of the past of the other woman.

She agrees, however, to make the trial. At home her husband and her relatives accept her hesitantly. They, too, are puzzled and there is much to mystify them. At the crisis of their doubt a beast of a man with whom Lucia had been living in Berlin produces a mad woman whose attendants claim that she is the real Lucia and offer proof in support.

Again the wavering family is doubtful. Lucia, knowing that she can live again only in so far as her husband and her kin desire her to live, and as they desire her, refuses further to accept their doubt. Convinced now that their interest in her is purely material, for they would have profited by her dowry if her identity could have been established, she takes again to the road and a new freedom.

Judith Anderson is impressively cast as the struggling Lucia, and her performance does most to save the play. Her support includes Douglas Dumbrille and José Ruben.

ions and eating strawberries and cream without ever sewing a fine seam.

The boss is very fond of Laura and very good to her. When he travels she goes as his secretary. It is thus she reaches Colorado, where she meets Jack Madison, a young newspaper man who has approached God's country in pursuit of health that had almost left him. He has practically recovered it when Laura appears.

Love at First Sight.

You've guessed it! Love at first sight!

"Marry me!" cries Jack to Laura.

"Tell me your heart I have won!"

"But," says she, "you will not want me
When you know what I have done!"

"Ha!" he laughs, "I know, already;
But you've finished with that life;
All I want, my lovely Laura,
Is for you to be my wife . . ."

She promises gladly, and packs up to return to New York—alone. Her boss tells her he thinks she's very short-sighted, but Laura is a-da-mant. Jack is suddenly sent to Australia—I believe it's Australia—for his paper.

"I'll be true and I'll be waiting
When you come back three months hence!"

Laura cries. They kiss and part and
On their several ways go thence.

But—work isn't easy to get. Jack's cables suddenly cease and how is Laura to know he's been sent into the interior? Enters Marjorie Rambeau with a lot of advice. And the landlord gets mean to Laura. On the heels of all this appears Father Murdock with a crick in his back, asking what kind of a daughter has he got who won't ante up to pay a doctor when her own mother's sick and her father not able to do duty as a longshoreman.

Well, Willard Brockton is waiting and anxious and, when Jack zooms back from Australia all set to gather his bride to his arms—why if she just isn't up on Park avenue living with that Mr. Brockton again . . . . !

I think we are meant to gather that on the Christmas eve aforementioned Laura reforms for good. Well, maybe. But—"If guts ain't in you, why guts AIN'T,"—as I heard one lusty brakeman confide to another on the Illinois Central train the other night.

You will be considerably intrigued with the acting of all the principals and be downright fond of Miss Bennett. She's very appealing in this number. Mr. Menjou gives his usual polished performance. Robert Montgomery is as his admirers would have him be. Minor portrayals satisfy with the exception of several bits by Miss Rambeau, who is excellent in other bits.

The film is splendidly staged and recorded, and the dialogue isn't bad, at all.

You won't feel gypped if you invest in a ticket to "The Easiest Way." But leave the babies home, for it's a "pink."

See you tomorrow,

GREEK ACTRESS

MME. MARIKA COTOPOULI.

Dear Miss Tinee: I have not ten you for a long time relat the movies, but as I am still a ne movie fan and persistent rea your daily and Sunday colu thought a few remarks might genius.

I have seen many pictures th year, some excellent, some good, poor, others terrible.

As a rule John Barrymore, Bancroft, William Powell, Nagel, Lewis Stone, and the tw rys can always be counted on t you good acting, hence, gener good picture.

Among the femmes Marie D is in a class by herself in he while Ruth Chatterton, Kay F Kay Johnson, Joan Crawford, an Jurdine always deliver.

Excellent pictures, "Byrd South Pole," "The White H Its Pals," "Africa Speaks," Angels," "Disraeli," and, of others. John Gilbert is awful Way of a Sailor," and Clara Bo me in "Her Wedding Night."

In closing I may add I thi shows at the leading downtow diers could be shortened abou an hour without a loss of patr in fact, this would probably in the revenue. They can retain high class amusement and thre about one half hour of stuff boring. Two hours would seem enough for any one, unless they to go and eat and sleep. The Voice of the Movie Fan

Movie Fan's Summary.

Dear Miss Tinee: I have not written you for a long time relative to the movies, but as I am still a regular movie fan and persistent reader of your daily and Sunday column, I thought a few remarks might not be amiss.

I have seen many pictures the last year, some excellent, some good, some fair, others terrible.

Excellent pictures, "Byrd at the South Pole," "The White Hell of Pitz Palu," "Africa Speaks," "Hell's Angels," "Disraeli," and, of course, "The Big House." John Gilbert is awful in "In Gay Old Vic of a Sailor," and Clara Bow the same in "Her Wedding Night."

In closing I may add I think the shows of the leading downtown theaters could be shortened about half an hour without a loss of patronage; in fact, this would probably increase the revenue. They can retain their high class amusement and throw out about one half hour of stuff that is boring. Two hours would seem long enough for any one, unless they want to go and eat and sleep. I continue to hold my high opinion of you as a critic, even if I frequently disagree with you.

Yours very truly,
HARRY T. JOHNSON.

Editor's note: So glad to have heard from you again.

Young Mr. Stone.

Dear Miss Tinee: This is my first and possibly last appearance in your columns [cheers!] so I might as well get a bit off my mind [?] in one magnificent outburst.

I read Miss Natalie Gruen's rather aggrieved criticism of the picture, "The Office Wife." She seems to think that Lewis Stone is too old to play lover parts—in fact, she says she thought the scene on the beach was ridiculous because Mr. Stone is so distinctly mature and Miss Mackail so overwhelmingly adolescent. Furthermore, Miss Gruen, who is, no doubt, a charming young lady, if a trifle hasty in her judgment, insists on comparing Mr. Stone with very old, doddering prehistoric specimens of King Tut's régime.

All this is distressing to me, a devoted follower of Mr. Stone. He is not only one of our most gifted and consistent performers, but a delightful and charming gentleman, with a superabundance of energy and spirit. Anyone who really knows Lewis Stone would be terribly amused to hear him referred to as old. He suggests nothing so much as eternal youth. J. W.

Editor's note: A fine actor!

Greatest Work of Art.

Dear Miss Tinee: I thank you for your information in regard to the picture at the Cinema named "Freedom." I always make it a point to see your three star films and I have never been sorry. I saw "Freedom" and I was well pleased. It was the greatest work of art I have ever seen and I want to thank you for your valuable service to the public. Yours truly,
J. B. COOK.

Editor's note: Glad you enjoyed it!

In Defense of "Paid."

Dear Miss Tinee: I just got through reading your criticism on Joan Crawford's picture called "Paid." I think that you are unfair in giving "Paid" only two stars. You finished your column by saying that the people won't go crazy over the picture. I think that the people who saw the picture when I did couldn't have been more crazy over the picture if you had given it five stars. I for one am glad I didn't wait until your criticism of the picture was printed.

You say that Joan's make-up in the first scenes are terrible. I wonder if you have ever seen a person who has spent a few nights in jail. They get that black look, just like Joan's make-up looked.

If you will, please tell me why the censors made it an "Adults Only" picture. The only reason is because the people fal lfor those A. O. pictures. I should think that the movie people of Chicago would try and do away with such narrow minded censors. I am for a federal censorship.

Yours truly,
MISS F. R. L.

Editor's note: There's nothing like having a mind of one's own.

'Peter Ibbetson' Makes Bow at New York Met

Deems Taylor Changes Play Into Opera.

By Edward Moore.

has allowed his artistic conscience full play in casting it, with Lucrezia Bori as Mary, Edward Johnson as Peter, and Lawrence Tibbett as Col. Ibbetson. It ought to give the work a good chance, provided only that public taste has not been injured by some of the bad examples of the last twenty years.

It is to be sung in English, which is perhaps the weakest element in its chance for success, though with frequent shifts, more or less sustained, into French, which may help to save it. For nothing is more certain than that the public at present cares little about what language an opera is sung in as long as it is not English.

A Word of Explanation.

Let me try again to state my position on this matter. A letter now on my desk informs me, "You, like all of your colleagues as well as many other authorities upon this particular subject, have continuously stressed the lack of good and suitable translations of foreign operas as the major reason for its lack of success." I have never stressed anything of the sort, or if I have, it has been upon an individual and unfortunate case of translation. On the other hand, I have been personally acquainted with many workable and some excellent translations.

What I have stressed has been the way the American public has unanimously decided that anything on earth is more entertaining than opera in English. I have been present during the times when, years ago, Campanini played his Saturday night operas in English to pitiful houses and played them again the following season in their untranslated form to good houses; when the second performance of Henry Hadley's "Azora" revealed a total box office sale on the main floor of five seats; when America generally—not Chicago, which had a good record in this case—permitted the American Opera company to fall into insolvency two seasons ago and made it impossible to return this year. When I read heated appeals about the "practical considerations" of opera in English, such matters are seldom mentioned. But it is not altogether impossible to understand Mr. Insull's lack of enthusiasm on the subject.

However, a news item states that a week before "Peter Ibbetson" was due for performance there were over 2,000 applications for seats and only 400 seats were available outside of the regular subscription list. If such a thing had ever happened in Chicago in the past, or if there were even a possibility of its happening in the future, there would probably be a change of mind on the part of the Civic Opera company.

Reader Makes Suggestion.

From a letter by Charles H. Mitchell, with thanks, as well, for the part not quoted:

"I should like to make a suggestion, which I feel many people in Chicago would concur in. Why don't you, in the SUNDAY TRIBUNE, conduct a column for correspondents similar to the 'Vox Playgoer?' I realize, of course, that from time to time you print letters from correspondents in the body of your own column, but I think something of this kind separate from your own column would be valuable. Every one enjoys reading letters from individuals about music and their opinions of the concerts and recitals. Maybe such a column would not be practicable from the point of view of space, but it seems to me that if it could possibly be arranged it would prove an indispensable adjunct to your already indispensable music department."

Cellist with Symphony.

Gregor Piatigorsky was to have been the cello soloist with the Chicago Symphony orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, but he is down with pneumonia and his season's tour has been canceled. In his place Maurice Maréchal, another personality of the cello, will appear, and the program has been entirely recast from what was first announced.

M. Maréchal will play concertos by Vivaldi of the ancients and Honegger of the moderns. Dr. Stock tells that the orchestral numbers will be Handel's Concerto in D minor, Arne Oldberg's Third Symphony, Balakireff's "Oriental Fantasy," and Strauss' "Emperor" waltzes.

On the Tuesday afternoon program José Iturbi, the pianist, will appear in Beethoven's Fourth Concerto, otherwise the one in G major. In connection with Bruckner's Nine Symphony, which Dr. Stock is to conduct on this occasion, an announcement comes from New York telling of the organization of the Bruckner Society of America, and asking for country-wide membership, $1 a year for regular members, $5 a year for founders' memberships. Robert G. Grey, secretary, 535 West 110th street, New York, will receive checks and answer questions.

The aim of the society is to develop interest in and appreciation of the works of Bruckner, Mahler, and such modern compositions as carry on the classical tradition. It would seem to be a worthy object, with at least more in its favor than the exaltation of those whose chief claim to favor is their scorn of all classical traditions. Public lectures will embrace such subjects as "Religious Music for the Concert Hall," "The Development of the Art Song After Wagner's Time," "The Psychology of Polyphony," "The Development of the Choral Symphony," and "Wagner and Bruckner."

Boston Praises Opera.

The Civic Opera company, having finished its annual two weeks at Boston, moves on with an unwonted amount of praise from Boston reviewers. The Transcript of that city preludes its remarks with this:

"Dante, who could not admit the poets and philosophers of ancient Greece and Rome to the Christian heaven, assigned to them a place of abode in the other place where they were 'not wholly damned.'

"As long as Boston has the Chicago Civic Opera for a couple of blissful weeks in the winter, we are quite ready to regard the gunmen's paradise by the shores of Lake Michigan as not altogether a Hades. On the contrary, we highly commend its enterprise.

"We have heard that 'opera is dying,' but in our hearts we do not believe it.

"Time has abated its stiffness; it has added dramatic animation even to its choruses, and always there remains in human hearts a firm nucleus of the old joy.

"There is still a deeper emotion in the pour of music in conjunction with the eternal human spectacle than there is in any other form of music. We shall flock to hear 'Don Giovanni,' and no doubt even 'Trovatore,' with the old delight. Opera may change; it does not die."

They greatly liked the Wagner works, especially "Die Meistersinger," in which regard Boston and Chicago are pretty well at one. There are also many kind words about "Don Giovanni," "Pelleas et Melisande," "Il Trovatore," and "La Bohème." At the time of writing, notices of "Camille" have not penetrated this far west.

Nor has there been much information about engagement contracts for another season. One only has been made public, but that one registers as important. Isaac Van Grove has been engaged as conductor and coach. For four years, from 1921 to 1925, he was assistant conductor with the company, conducting several works during that time. Since 1927 he has been musical and artistic director of the summer seasons of opera in Cincinnati, and in 1929-'30 he was a first class musical director of the American Opera company.

Two Interesting Pieces.

Some excerpts from the program notes on the three pieces to be presented by the International Society for Contemporary Music at the Goodman this afternoon and tomorrow night:

"The text of 'The Creation' was written by James Weldon Johnson [born at Jacksonville, Fla., in 1871], a Negro author who, educated for the law, has served as United States consul in Venezuela and Nicaragua, but has become better known as a poet and as the writer of 'books' for the light opera stage. 'The Creation,' which is subtitled 'A Negro sermon of voice and eight instruments,' was composed by Louis Gruenberg in 1924 and published the following year in Germany. The instrumental accompaniment is scored for flute, bassoon [or violoncello], horn, kettledrums, percussion [cymbals, bass drum, triangle, glockenspiel, xylophone, side drum, and gong], viola and piano.

"The following is the plot of 'L'Histoire d'un Soldat': A soldier, returning home from the wars, rests awhile on the bank of a brook and, taking his faithful fiddle from his kit-bag, begins to play. He is interrupted by an amiable old gentleman, who offers to exchange the violin for a magic book which contains an answer to every question.

"The soldier yields to this offer and even follows his companion. But soon he finds he has made a mistake. Arriving home, he discovers his sweetheart is married to another and even his mother seems to have forgotten him. He seeks counsel from the book, becomes a merchant, and accumulates wealth; but riches bring him no happiness. The soldier, now filled with disgust for his magic volume, returns to a life of adventure.

"In the town where the king's daughter lies sick he tries to cure her. The old gentleman whom the soldier had met by the brook arrives on the same errand, carrying the fiddle with him. A musical contest takes place between them and the soldier wins back the instrument and, with the dances which he plays, heals the princess, whom he marries. The enigmatic stranger now reveals himself as the devil and he swears to recapture the soldier if the latter ever crosses the border of the kingdom. Homesickness gnaws at the soldier's heart and he sets out for his native village; but the devil is waiting for his victim and he pounces upon the soldier as he crosses the boundary. The princess is left at a milestone, her arms outstretched into the void.

Offers for Barrymores.

Although Ethel Barrymore Colt, daughter of Ethel Barrymore, who is appearing in "Scarlet Sister Mary," has been on the stage only four and a half months she has received several offers of engagements when her season is completed. Nor has John Drew Colt, son of the actress, been overlooked. He has received an offer from Hollywood.

"FIRST ACTRESS"

MRS. MINNIE MADDERN FISKE

SIXTY years of acting are on Mrs. Fiske's record, but she is still a spirited comedienne, adept at evoking laughter. In "Ladies of the Jury," at the Blackstone, she is as lively as if she were still in the frolicsome forties. She is getting ready to revive "Becky Sharp," the dramatization of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," Becky is one of her most famous roles.

Novelties Mark Performance of Choral Society

New York Charmed by New Compositions.

By Joan King.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—[Special.]—Following the season's trend toward novelty, hereabouts, the Schola Cantorum, as its mid-season offering to Carnegie hall habitués, gave a program comprised of five works, four of which had never before been heard in New York. In so doing Hugh Ross was living up to a reputation for pioneering inclinations which he has won since he took over the Cantorum baton, several years ago.

Richard Strauss' setting for chorus and orchestra of Goethe's "Wanderers' Sturmlied" opened the evening. Then came Karol Szymanowski's "Stabat Mater"; Jan Sibelius' setting of a northern myth, "Ukko, the Fire Maker"—first time in America; Constant Landert's "The Rio Grande," and Percy Grainger's "Father and Daughter." The last named was the only number of the program which had had previous hearing in this town.

As always, the Schola gave splendid performances. The chorus itself is comprised of 200 voices and on this occasion was assisted by the New York university male choir, Ethel Hayden, soprano; Eleanor Reynolds, contralto, and Nelson Eddy, baritone, with Colin McPhell at the piano, as soloists.

Finished Performance.

Of this new music, all of which is by living composers, the "Stabat Mater" was by far the most interesting and its performance the most finished. This is a setting of the old text and is scored for orchestra, chorus, and three solo singers. It is a short, concise work and in producing it the Polish composer left much of his unusual daring behind and wrote with simplicity and feeling, sustaining the delicious mood of the music beautifully. The audience seemed greatly impressed.

"Ukko, the Fire Maker," new to this country, proved not to be one of Sibelius' greatest scores. The solo baritone chants of the earth in gloom and cold, "Was the Sunlight Gone Forever?" The chorus answers of the fire that Ukko created, of the falling of the flame from the careless hands of the air sprite to the earth, "Through the Nine Spangled Vaults of Heaven." The work was composed for the opening of the Finnish National theater in 1902. It ends with extreme brilliance and imagination.

The Grainger piece provided a bit of refreshment and a mockery to seriousness. It is a development by chorus and orchestra of a dance song from the Faroe islands. It is scored for five men's voices, double mixed chorus, strings, brass, and a mandolin and guitar band. Mr. Grainger himself was present at the guitar and succeeded in receiving several curtain calls.

Choral Demonstration.

Another interesting choral occasion was provided in the same hall the following evening by the Westminster choir. This is an organization which was originally the choir of the Westminster Presbyterian church, Dayton, O., where it achieved a national reputation several years ago. In 1926 the leader, Dr. Williamson, with the original choir as nucleus, founded a choir school in Dayton and last year the Westminster school was moved to Ithaca, N. Y., where it is a non-sectarian institution for the purpose of training choir directors and improving standards of church music.

The performance Friday evening was an excellent testimonial for the work of Dr. Williamson and his colleagues. The forty-eight singers of the choir demonstrated a fine unity, volume, and tone. The program gave interesting and varied religious music of different types and periods.

A novel aspect of the occasion was the marching in of 250 members of the choirs of twelve churches of Greater New York, dully gowned, while Horace Hunt played the March of the Priests from Mendelssohn's "Athalie" as a compliment to the visitors.

THE ARMCHAIR PLAYGOER

By Fanny Butcher.

MANNA to the starving pioneers, a drink of cold water [ginny and fizzy] to the drought-bound, a breath of the great world to the brave souls in the outposts of civilization are what published plays of current Broadway hits seem to some Chicagoans. It is so much easier to be nonchalant when one has read the actual script of a "wow" than when one has merely read about it. That a good many of the hits seem a little less bulls eyes after reading than they did merely by hearsay is just one of the penalties that man pays for his acquisition of knowledge.

The latest of the gifts to the poor yokels outside Broadway is "The Vinegar Tree," words and all. It has just been published by Farrar and Rinehart and makes the fourth of the year's thrills which those enterprising young publishers have provided for the unfortunates who are banned by a thousand miles from Broadway [or, according to the point of view, the blessed ones who can take their plays or leave them in the ease of their dressing gowns and an armchair].

"The Green Pastures," by Marc Connelly, "Lysistrata" [including the unexpurgated words, but without the wiggles] which brought Mr. Aristophanes a couple of thousand years from his grave, "Once in a Lifetime," by George Kauffman and Moss Hart, the absolutely swell lowdown on Hollywood [which we shall discuss anon] were the formidable forerunners of "The Vinegar Tree." Mr. Osborn's opus isn't, from the point of view of the written drama, a peer of its three predecessors on the list of modern plays, but it is a witty, amusing, gay frivol, so deftly managed that it seems a much less important piece of writing than it is, which is the major virtue that a bit of light comedy can have.

"The Vinegar Tree" may have some esoteric significance in the play. It is mentioned once but without delineation. I imagine the author put that title in to make it hard. There is such a creature as the vinegar tree, according to the books of information: the staghorn sumac which grows in the eastern part of the United States and has super-acidy berries. Perhaps the author merely meant to warn his customers that there was nothing sweet and cloying about his offering.

The protagonists of "The Vinegar Tree" are a painter and his lady love [who collects husbands the way some people collect postage stamps], who contrive a week together in the country through the ruse of visiting the lady's sister, who had once been a mild childish love of the painter's. The sister has a grumpy husband and a girl child home from her first year in college and all wet and drippy around the eyes and the heart because the lad she loves thinks that being a virgin is no preparation for modern marriage.

There are endless chances for misunderstandings [with the painter going all middle aged and romantic about the sweet young thing, her mother going all middle aged and romantic about the the love of her youth, the boy and girl going all youthful and romantic about being hard and experienced, and the lady love and her brother-in-law keeping the balance with sophistication [on her part] and a general, amusing bellowing [on his]. It's froth, slightly acider than it seems at first, with a real guffaw at the end.

"Journey's End," by R. C. Sherriff, will be the subject of a lecture recital by Davis Edwards of the department of public speaking of the University of Chicago on Tuesday evening at 6:45 in Fullerton hall of the Art institute of Chicago. It will conclude Mr. Edwards' series of five lectures on the contemporary drama.

Peggy Wood Returning?

"Bitter Sweet," Noel Coward's operetta, will end its long run in London a few weeks hence. It has been in performance there for a year and a half. Maybe this means that Peggy Wood, who has been its heroine most of the time, will soon return to her native shores.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal and signed of his own advertisements, expresses alarm, according to Motion Picture Daily, as follows:

"Not content with building such luxurious theaters that you scared the hoi polloi away from them, you [exhibitors] suddenly got high-hat, discarded all the old successful hokum advertising and got the idea that it was smart to advertise in a repressed, superior sort of way. Business fell off.... You moaned depression. Now, get back to first principles of showmanship again. 'Dust off your book on the life of Barnum.'"

If Mr. Laemmle has been correctly quoted he is making a lot of unnecessary cracks. He is even a bit high-hat, himself, using such Back Bay words as "hoi polloi" to describe the man and woman in the street. Let Mr. Laemmle drop in and take a look at the boys in the "college room" beneath the Paramount theater's auditorium, or let him amble over to Jerry's and have tea in the soft light and silky comfort of the lounging room there. Then he can take a look at the enlightened thousands filling the comfortable seats of the huge theater.

Hoi Polloi Unawed.

Mr. Laemmle will find the "hoi polloi" quite unawed and entirely unaware that there has been any attempt to awe them. In fact, he may hear complaints about side seats, slowness of elevator service and unwillingness to obey the dictates of the uniformed attendants.

Regarding the trend toward dignity in movie advertising—well, take a look at it yourself. It still is composed largely of adjectives. The aforementioned movie man is quoted as saying: "Dignity in almost any advertising is a lot of hooey, but in the show business it is stark, staring, mad suicide."

There you are—fighting words. But just what does the movie mogul mean by dignity? Anyhow, we intend taking the evening off and attending the next Universal opening. There is a chance that it may tie up traffic.

Plays into Talkies.

The movie men still are turning 'em into talkies. There is "The Bachelor Father" chattering away at the Capitol theater this week. It once was Edward Child Carpenter's play which David Belasco staged with great success. Marion Davies has the leading role as the favorite child and, all in all, the talkie is almost as good as the stage presentation.

Then, there is one called the "Royal Bed," on view at the Mayfair. It was adapted from Robert E. Sherwood's stage play, "The Queen's Husband." Lowell Sherman has the leading role and plays the part of a hen pecked man who likes to play checkers with the handy man. It is fair entertainment, but the talkies should be able to find better material.

The coast guard is glorified in "Men on Call," Edmund Lowe's latest picture on exhibition at the Fox theater in Brooklyn. That greatly overworked theme of the plot makers, the long arm of coincidence, has a stiff job in "Men on Call." The settings and photography as well as bits of the acting make up for the unconvincing parts in the plot.

When Mrs. Abe Called Lincoln 'You Old Fool'

Illinois Woman Recalls a Sprightly Episode.

Mrs. Hunt is a resident of Winnetka, Ill., and is now at her winter home, Oleander Knoll, Crystal Beach, Fla. These reminiscences have never before been published.

By Eugenia Jones Hunt.

MY reminiscences of Abraham Lincoln are closely entwined with those of my father, John Albert Jones.

My father and his mother moved from Georgetown, D. C., to Illinois in 1835. They first considered going to Chicago, but, having been informed that there was danger of malaria, as it was too near the lake for health, they chose Tremont; also, the fact that the latter place was settled by Virginians, Kentuckians, and New Yorkers was a deciding factor in their choice. Among them were the Dan Munns, the Wilsons, the Flints, the Philo Thompsons, the Ben James, parents of Louis, the actor, and the John Scotts. Alas for Tremont, these residents soon became pioneer Chicagoans, although after the Flints and Munns amassed fortunes in Chicago they finally settled in the east.

My father expected to follow his friends and once started on horseback with his resources in a belt around his waist. En route he was overtaken by a messenger with a letter from Mr. Lincoln, requesting him to come at once to Springfield on important business. After this untoward circumstance my father felt that Providence intended him to seek his fortunes elsewhere than in Chicago.

His Elbows Out.

Tremont was then the county seat of Tazewell county. Mr. Lincoln, Judges Thomas, Baker, Davis, Treat and a host of eminent jurists were frequently there, when "swinging around the circuit," which comprised fourteen counties. The lawyers always quartered, gratuitously, a month or two, with their friends when practicing in the local courts. I recall hearing my mother ask my father to drive out to Pierre Menard's to bring Mr. Lincoln and Judge David Davis to Sunday evening supper. When Mr. Lincoln demurred, Judge Davis laughed and said: "Lincoln, tell Jones you don't like to meet ladies, as your elbows are out."

"I'm ragged," exclaimed Mr. Lincoln and clapped a hand on each elbow. "Jones, I can't go, I'm ragged."

He was wearing a black alpaca coat. I saw my aunt nudge my mother and heard her whisper: "Look at Lincoln with his elbows out."

On this occasion Mr. Lincoln noticed that my little brother was limping. He called: "Sonny, come here." He took Albert on his knee and said: "This little fellow has a stone bruise." Mr. Lincoln took out his knife, opened the bruise, and then pocketed the knife, without sterilization before or after the operation.

"Hind Part Before."

My father told me he "saw Mr. Lincoln win a case by calling the jurors' attention to Judge Logan's dickey." In his appeal to the jury for his client Mr. Lincoln exclaimed: "Why, just look at Judge Logan, he doesn't even know how to put his dickey on. See it! Look at it! He has it hind part before." We all knew Judge Logan was one of our ablest jurists, but indifferent to dress.

Another time when Mr. Lincoln was "swinging around the circuit" Mrs. Lincoln embraced the opportunity to raise the front part of their house another story, as it now stands. The John S. Bradfords lived opposite the Lincolns in Springfield. Mrs. Bradford told me that "all the neighbors were on the qui vive to see what would happen when Mr. Lincoln returned." He paced back and forth in front of his house, holding his head high, looking al laround, with his hands under his coat tails, and looking distraught, much to the amusement of his neighbors. Mr. Lincoln enjoyed teasing his wife, but the publicity of his pantomime irritated Mrs. Lincoln, and, putting her head out of the window, she called, "Come in, you old fool. Don't you know your own house when you see it?" He went in. Mrs. Lincoln, we knew, was cultured and used choice diction.

"That Lost Speech."

I'll skip to that "lost speech." Mr. Lincoln delivered it in the hall of my grandfather, William T. Major, in Bloomington, Ill., said to be the birthplace of the Republican party. As my father was unable to attend the meeting, immediately after its adjournment Judge David Davis, Judge Trumbull and Leonard Sweet drove thirty miles to our Tremont home to discuss this great speech and the newly formed Republican party—all declaring the Whig party was dead.

I also remember one of the rallies during the Lincoln campaign of 1860 and that Gov. Bebb and Tom Corwin of Ohio, Leonard Swett and Judge Trumbull were the speakers. Our home was in an uproar, bedlam let loose, for in compliment to or curiosity of the honored guests, the house, grounds and porches were crowded, the "Wide Awakes" much to the fore, with their slogans, bands playing, four drums beating, one in each of the four windows of the dining room, where forty guests were dining, but, apparently, the diners were not disturbed, for they said to my father: "Let the boys frolic. Don't stop the hullabaloo."

My father carved, excitedly, forty pounds of roast beef, my mother calmly carving a ham. Mr. Swett remarked that she reminded him of the statue of Peace.

Pen and Toothpick.

Tad Lincoln asked my father, the morning after the assassination, if he would like a remembrance of his father. My father replied, "Yes, Tad, but of no value." Tad led him to the President's desk and gave him the last pen used, not a quill, as shown by the cinemas, but steel, with a wooden holder, a brass pen rack and the toothpick his father had formed from a bit of the Atlantic cable. It is about three inches long. Mr. Lincoln had coiled one end of the size of a three-cent silver coin for the handle.

Mr. Lincoln honored my father by appointing him superintendent of commercial statistics immediately after forming his cabinet, a post which my father held in Washington until after the assassination.

Tribute to Carl Laemmle.

Leaders of every branch in the industry gathered to pay tribute Carl Laemmle at a surprise t ional on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his entrance into the motion ture field. Mary Pickford made gracious little speech and cred "Uncle Carl" with "discovering" by giving her a job in the old company. Will Rogers, Will H Cecil De Mille, and Irving Thal also made complimentary speeche Laemmle resigned as manager clothing store in Oshkosh, where he had gone as a German immigrant, unacquainted with the English language, and went to Chicago 1906. He had intended to open a and ten cent store, but instead ent a movie, got a thrill out of it, visions of profit in the novelty soon opened his own motion pic house on Milwaukee avenue. He made his first indepen film, "Hiawatha," in 1910 in Minneapolis, and in 1915 moved west huge virgin tract near Hollywo which he named Universal City, converted it into a permanent mo picture plant, which still is one the biggest and best.

Carmen Barnes to Appear in Her Own Film

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—Hollywood is watching to see if Carmen Barnes, 18 year old Chattanooga, Tenn., authoress of novels, will blaze into such screen prominence as Mary Brian and Nancy Carroll, who were picked from outside the film ranks, or will fade out, as did Ruth Taylor and Betty Bronson.

Miss Barnes was notified on her eighteenth birthday that she had been chosen as a starring actress. Her previous brief acquaintance with films was made in Paramount's scenario department after she was brought here as a 17 year old prodigy who had written two novels, "School Girl" and "Bean Lover," and had had the second dramatized into a play.

While here she worked on a scenario called "A Debutante Confesses," and when several actresses seemed to the studio heads not to personify the part of the immature heroine in the manner they wished, they gave Miss Barnes the screen test which launched her into a contract.

Her father is Wellington Barnes, a manufacturer in Chattanooga. Her mother, under the name of Dinantha Ellis, writes poetry. Miss Barnes attended a Nashville girls' school until a year ago.

Tribute to Carl Laemmle.

Leaders of every branch in the film industry gathered to pay tribute to Carl Laemmle at a surprise testimonial on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his entrance into the motion picture field. Mary Pickford made a gracious little speech and credited "Uncle Carl" with "discovering" her by giving her a job in the old Imp company. Will Rogers, Will Hays, Cecil De Mille, and Irving Thalberg also made complimentary speeches.

Laemmle resigned as manager of a clothing store in Oshkosh, Wis., where he had gone as a German immigrant, unacquainted with the English language, and went to Chicago in 1906. He had intended to open a five and ten cent store, but instead entered a movie, got a thrill out of it, saw visions of profit in the novelty and soon opened his own motion picture house on Milwaukee avenue.

He made his first independent film, "Hiawatha," in 1910 in Minneapolis, and in 1915 moved west to a huge virgin tract near Hollywood, which he named Universal City, and converted it into a permanent motion picture plant, which still is one of the biggest and best.

News of Films and Players.

The engagement of Miss Marjorie Strauss, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Strauss of Chicago, and Jack Cummings of Hollywood, son of Mrs. Ida Cummings and nephew of Louis B. Mayer, was announced recently. The groom is an executive of the M-G-M studio.

Edward G. Robinson, star of "Little Caesar," appeared at the local opening of his picture at the Warners' Hollywood theater. Robinson made a brief curtain speech in which he complained that a day's work for him was killing six men and that his hands got callouses from gun toting during the making of his gunman success. "However, I'm not kicking, I love it," he said.

Ben Lyon introduced other members of the cast and a gala audience received the picture with acclaim.

The color line is a tough one in Hollywood, where folks have not gone Harlem. The big colored boy, Oo-mooloo, the gun bearer in "Trader Horn," had to have his Central avenue yaller gal in the audience before he would agree to make his personal appearance at the opening. The studio officials compromised by putting her in the projection booth and Oo-moo-loo was satisfied and his girl friend properly impressed.

Palm Beach to Offer Prize for Gas Station

Garden Club Improves Local Landscape.

PALM BEACH, Fla.—[Special.]—As an identification tag of the twentieth century there is no bit of Americana more typical than the ubiquitous gas station. It blossoms from one end of the nation to the other, and usually its blossoms are not choice. So the Palm Beach Garden club has decided to do something about it.

An award of $200, offered by Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury of Philadelphia and Palm Beach, will be made by the Garden club to the local architect who offers the best design for a gas station, the designs to be exhibited at the annual flower show on Feb. 20, 21, and 22. The "best" design, in this instance, is interpreted as meaning the most attractive and inconspicuous type of station as opposed to the "individualistic" types that now scar the innocent countryside.

Mrs. Stotesbury posted her prize at a recent meeting of the flower show committee at the home of Mrs. George A. McKinlock, one of the most active members of the Garden club. Mrs. John H. Gibbons of Philadelphia, who is also a member of that committee, is offering a $50 prize to be awarded during the flower show to the owner of the best looking gas station in Palm Beach.

The show will be housed again this year in the Poinciana conservatories and is expected to attract a spectacular exhibition of orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Dillman of Grosse Pointe, Mich., and Mr. and Mrs. James P. Donahue and Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Hutton of New York are the colony's premier orchid fanciers.

Minneapolis Symphony Concert.

The esthetic and intellectual life of the colony is quickened each season by the musical events sponsored by the Society of Arts and the lectures arranged by the Current Events club. Both of these organizations stated their seasonal activities during the last week.

The Minneapolis Symphony orchestra concert was the first offering of the Society of Arts, and it is also to be the society's second treat, for the symphony is to play its final engagement here on Monday night at the Paramount theater.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Nash Hurley attended the symphony's first concert as the guests of Mrs. George Rassmusen. Mr. and Mrs. Hurley were joined at the Breakers recently by their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Ryan, who have been honeymooning at Belleair. Mr. and Mrs. Hurley are going on to Miami Beach about the middle of the week, while Mr. and Mrs. Ryan will leave for Havana.

Hamilton Fish Lectures.

Representative Hamilton Fish Jr. of New York, a member of the house foreign affairs committee, started the series of Current Events lectures with a discussion of "Russian Activities." "Japan" is the subject of the second lecture, to be presented at the home of Addison Mizner, the architect, on Wednesday afternoon by the Japanese author, Yusuke Tsurumi.

Col. and Mrs. R. R. McCormick arrived early in the week to be the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. George A. McKinlock at Casa Alejandro and were honor guests at a luncheon given at the Embassy club by their hosts. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Nash Hurley were also present at this luncheon.

The Palm Beach Playhouse, organized this season by Miss Muriel McCormick, continues on its most successful career. Its Tuesday night openings have become one of "the things to do" in Palm Beach, an occasion for milady's smartest frock and best jewels and her escort's white tie.

Both Saturday performances—matinée and night—are "pop" affairs, and it was recently decided to advance the opening of the Saturday night performance from 9:30 to 8:30. Otherwise the curtain goes up on the evening performance at 9:30, leaving the theater patron ample time to devote to his demi tasse. Even this liberal curtain hour is none too late for a colony that seldom dines before 9 p. m.

Miss McCormick and members of the Playhouse were recently the tea guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Dillman.

Ideal Fishing Weather.

There has been an abundance of that fishin' weather and anglers have been trying their luck in the gulf stream daily. Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Hall have been out in the Florence. R. M. Florsheim and his guest, S. W. Reinhardt, were out in the Buddy recently, and Mr. Florsheim returned to shore with a sailfish measuring 6 feet, 6 inches.

No week in Palm Beach is complete without its quota of celebrities. Nancy Carroll, the film star, was here during the first of the week and Count Felix Von Luckner, the famous German sea raider of war days, and his party are now at the Ambassador hotel for a sojourn here.

The Chieftain, one of the largest yachts anchored in Lake Worth, brought its owner, Albert B. Dick and Mrs. Dick and their guests, Mr. and Mrs. Secor Cunningham, into Palm Beach during the first of the week. They have been at the Royal Poinciana and plan a cruise through the keys during the coming week.

Mrs. Long Takes Villa.

Mrs. Joseph B. Long has taken possession of the Count Carlo Filipponi Villa. Mrs. Long enjoys the late season activities in Palm Beach and will remain until April. Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Barkhausen were other Chicago arrivals during the week and have opened their beautiful home on Ocean place. They will remain until late in the season, and their young daughter, Kate, has already been enrolled in the Palm Beach private school for girls.

Mrs. Roy B. Meredith and her three children, Edgar, John and Patricia, are recent additions to the Chicago colony. They will spend the rest of the season with Mrs. Meredith's mother, Mrs. Charles Curry.

New York Sees Much of Titled English Folk

Seems to Be Open Season for Celebrities.

By Nancy Randolph.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—This is truly Visitors' week. Town is simply crammed with notables from abroad, most of whom sport British titles and frankly boast of their American blood. The Milford-Havens, of course, are being widely feted. Every one is telling them that the south is utterly dormant and that if they want to see anything of society they might as well remain in New York. All the hostesses of note are taking turns giving dinners for the cousin of King George and his wife, and until they leave for Havana, via Washington, D. C., they won't have a moment's peace.

The Aquitania this week brought one of the most blueblooded of American countesses, when the earl and countess of Moray arrived to pay a visit to the countess' natal land. Away back in '24, Barbara Murray, second daughter of the Archibald Murrays, married the young Lord Doune, heir to the earldom of Moray, which, as you may know, is one of the most historic of the ancient Scottish titles.

Sons of two Jameses of Scotland, with the bar sinister on their escutcheons, bore the title of Moray, the second holder being a blood brother of the ill-famed Mary queen of Scots. This earl of Moray became regent of Scotland after Mary renounced the throne.

Eighteenth of His Line.

The present earl of Moray is the eighteenth of his line and is one of the richest peers of the land of the thistle. Barbara is a niece of Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, of Mrs. Lucius K. Wilmerding and of Mrs. Wickcliffe Yuille, names that are unsurpassed, so far as cerulean hue of blood is concerned.

Barbara and her earl will be in town for several weeks, and will be fêted at Tuxedo Park as well as New York, several jolly skating parties having already been arranged in their honor.

Interesting Rumor.

No one seems to know just who is responsible for the tale that the duke of Leinster was bent upon wedding Muguette Clark Gower, daughter of the late Senator William A. Clark, whose huge mansion on the avenue was the scene of the first of the great parties given in honor of the prince of Wales when he first came to this country in 1919.

Leinster, a young and not too wealthy Irish duke, was frankly amazed to hear that he was to marry the Clark heiress, all the more so as he hadn't even met her. The amusing point of it is that having heard the whole tale the duke's interest has been aroused and several hostesses of note obligingly arranged that he might have a view of the young lady, who, at present, is enjoying freedom from marital bonds that she found irksome after a short trial.

Paris Attends Openings of the Modistes

By May Birkhead.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—[Special.]—Early February sees important openings by Paris dressmakers. Several outstanding houses stage inaugurals of such distinction that they seem less a commercial undertaking than a mundane function. Perhaps one might say that they take on the character of a first night performance of a play, having highly trained mannequins and actors and an audience of notabilities drawn from many spheres of activity.

Take, for example, the Jean Patou opening, where the outstanding personalities in fashion, diplomacy, sport and society gathered at a special invitation, where champagne, cigarets and sandwiches were served while graceful models showed the types of costumes to be worn by women next spring and summer. The audience included the former Chicagoan, Helen Browne, now widow of Senator Paul Dupuy, owner of two well known Paris newspapers, Le Petit Parisien and Excelsior.

An Original Idea.

Since the death of her husband Mme. Dupuy has been in active charge of many of his interests, giving especial attention to the illustrated morning Excelsior. A few months ago she originated the idea of permitting any one to call up the paper and learn the latest news, with a three minute listening limit. She said this service numbers over 100,000 subscribers.

Another seen among the patrician throng at Patou's opening was Ganna Walska, now devoting her energy rather as a patron than an executant of music. She is often seen at the Théâtre des Champs Elysées in the Avenue Montaigne, where her loge is usually filled with celebrities.

Another notable espied was Lady Mendel, the former Elsie de Wolfe, now the wife of Sir Charles Mendel, attached to the British embassy at Paris. Like Mme. Dupuy, she has a house in Versailles, which place is not only celebrated as one of the world's greatest artistic show places but the place of residence of a number of Americans who enjoy the quiet old world charm, the excellent schools, and easy accessibility to the capital.

An Eminent Figure.

Another reminder of an eminent figure from Chicago is Henry White, former American ambassador to Paris, who for many years was first secretary at the London embassy. One of his chiefs was the late Robert T. Lincoln. Ambassador White first reached France by crossing from Baltimore to Le Havre in 1857 in 15 days in an old side wheeler which carried a cow and live chickens. Mr. White was also associated in London with another Lincolnian figure, John Hay, his ambassadorial chief for several years.

The Junior Guild, carrying on charity work in connection with the American church, recently installed itself in new headquarters in the Quai d'Orsay, and is preparing to give a winter fête on Feb. 16 to raise funds to help the poorer children of Paris and give aid to other benevolences.

WHEN CHICAGO WAS YOUNG

By Herma Clark.

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend, Julia Boyd of New York.

Chicago, June 17, 1876.

DEAR JULIA:

Well, what do you think of the nomination of Hayes for President? Will attended the Cincinnati convention, though he was not a delegate, and wrote me a good deal about it. He has gone on to Philadelphia to see his sister, Isabel, and will be away for three days more.

He said it was as "hot as blazes" in the convention, and he thought he should shuffle off this mortal coil before the devoted friends of a number of "favorite sons" had worked off their enthusiasm for these favorites and settled down to business. He wrote that the great Negro orator, Frederick Douglass, made quite a hit, the applause which greeted him causing the walls to reverberate.

Will felt disappointed for me, about the result of the vote for suffrage, as he knows how strongly I feel about women's rights. Of course, one would not have expected the resolution to be adopted, but the casual manner in which it was voted down is rather discouraging. I think if I had been a man, a delegate in that assembled convention, the text of that resolution would have moved me. Did you read it? It said:

"Whereas, we still remember with gratitude the services of the loyal women of the country during the late war; their devotion in the hospitals of the north and their fidelity to the Union, in many of the disputed sections of the south; and

"Whereas, the Republican party has always advocated the extension of human freedom,

"Resolved, that we favor the bestowal of equal civil and political rights on all loyal citizens of the United States, without regard to sex."

This resolution was cooly voted down. Woman suffrage will come some day, I firmly believe, but I fear it has a long road to travel first.

Will had been a strong supporter of James G. Blaine before the convention, but felt, after arriving at Cincinnati, that there was no hope for his nomination and was glad that so fine a man as Hayes was chosen. Will liked Mr. Hayes' looks, he writes. His age, 43 years, is excellent. His military record, his gallant service under Gen. Rosecrans, will help in his election, I should think. Will says everyone admits that he is a man of good ability, if not of the most commanding intellect, and his purity of character is unquestioned.

Now, who will be the Democratic candidate, I wonder. I met Perry H. Smith yesterday and was talking to him about it. He is one of the Democratic leaders of Chicago, and will be a delegate to the St. Louis convention. He is strong for Tilden.

June 24.

I, somehow, have left this letter unfinished, and now want to add a few lines before sending it on. I attended a reception this afternoon at the Drury Art gallery, where I met many old friends. It was a real ovation for G. P. A. Healy, our noted Chicago artist, who is leaving tomorrow to return to Europe. He says he will probably not be in Chicago again for six years. He has done many fine portraits during his stay here, and some of these were shown and highly praised.

There was a handsome portrait of Mrs. George Dunlap, and close at hand, one of Dr. Daniel Brainerd, who was first painted by the artist in Paris twenty-one years ago, Mr. Healy said. Dr. Brainerd has always been a great friend of Mr. Healy and had him as a guest when the young painter came to Chicago, I remember.

The three-quarters portrait of Mrs. H. O. Stone in a lovely lace dress with her fan in her hand, occupied a place of honor in the exhibition. Mrs. Stone is a handsome woman, with a kindly expression, which the artist has caught perfectly. Mrs. Perry H. Smith was painted in green silk, with a handsome necklace. Mrs. Henry J. Willing [a daughter of father's friend, Judge Mark Skinner], is another whose portrait every one was admiring. She is shown sitting in an arm chair, the picture being especially noteworthy for the expression of her fine eyes and the lovely flesh tones.

Another of the fine portraits in the exhibition is that of Mrs. J. V. Farwell. She is wearing a black velvet dress trimmed with lace and feathers. Mrs. William Blair's picture and that of Mr. Blair were hanging near by. Mrs. Blair dressed in black velvet, too. Miss Roxanna Wentworth's picture is one of the finest in the collection, I thought, and her father, "Long John," went about telling every one how pleased he was with it. He said he wouldn't have it changed in any particular. She is a beautiful young woman, and was one of the bridesmaids at the Caton-Spencer wedding, of which I wrote you recently.

I had a letter from a dear friend, Mrs. John Stillwell of Chatsworth, this week, and she told me a great deal about Mrs. Hayes, who is her cousin. She knows her very well and is devoted to her. She says that Mrs. Hayes is one of the finest women who ever lived and says that if Mr. Hayes is elected, his wife will truly grace the White House.

Far Eastern Things Touch Our Chicago

Japan, China Interpreted by Artists, Writers.

By Cousin Eve.

CHICAGO, dear old town, is going "Far East" these early days of February, and adding figures of charm, mystical and picturesque, to our horizon. There is Foujita with his strange, sophisticated cats, the center of such an Arts club tea as never was before. Mrs. John Carpenter and Mrs. Potter Palmer, chairman of the entertainment, moved distractedly among the surging members who were going on like a South American revolution.

If I hadn't seen Foujita at luncheon I would never have seen him at all. A little man, he was attired in a snuff colored ensemble, was bobbed, banged, and spectacled, and seemed to like being the storm center. The artist sketches humans as well as felines, but he endows them with cat-like charms, and the devil-may-care expression that belongs to every good cat of whatever country. I hear that "Barney" Goodspeed has commissioned Foujita to sketch him, but I greatly fear the results may look like a Japanese cat and thus not be a quite suitable companion piece for the lovely Boutet de Monvel painting of his wife.

Then, there was Dr. Chang, who spoke on Tuesday at the foreign relations luncheon on "The Situation in China," leaving it about as clear as midnight to the average American brain. Dr. Chang traveled with Mei Lan-fang, the pretty Chinese actor, last year, and is said to have one of the world's greatest minds. Anyway, much handed around in Chicago were they.

There are people who think that "situations" in China are all dramatized and seasoned up for Americans. Mrs. Calhoun says that all she knows about Chinese revolutions is that occasionally one large band of men marches out of one of Peiping's great outer gates, and another large band of men marches in. It sounds like the maneuvers of warriors in the third act of "Aïda," what?

Two Guests from Shanghai.

Then, there is the delightful Lucille Douglas of Shanghai, artist and lecturer, still with us, and coming, Mrs. Florence Ayscough, also of Shanghai, distinguished literary woman, writer, poetess, authority on things Chinese and "Sinologue." Mrs. Ayscough collaborated with the great Amy Lowell of Boston on "Fir-Flower Tablets."

Miss Lowell was a sister of A. Laurence Lowell, president of Harvard, and one of the first of the world's great ladies to enjoy a good cigar.

Last week in New York Mrs. Ayscough was dined as guest of honor with G. B. Chesterton and "Æ," he of the great gray whiskers and soothing dialect who lulled us all to dreamland at the Drama league last fall. Poor darling, how was he to know that his audience didn't understand Irish!

Mrs. Ayscough reads her poems first in Chinese, then English, wearing a magnificent costume of the T'ang dynasty. She tells of another China, not the one we know. Instead of bandits and missionaries, plagues, and famines, revolutions and wily mandarins, she writes of peace and romance, beauty and color. She takes one into secret gardens, silent temples, ancient palaces hidden away from eyes of the curious; along strange gray rivers, among people who love beauty and a quiet life. It is a fascinating China. Mrs. Ayscough (Aysco) was born there of New England parents. They say she is brilliant.

A Letter from Mrs. Sherfessee.

And then there was that delightful letter from the former Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, now Mrs. Forsythe Sherfessee, not from China, but from Manila. Her adventures since she left Cooperstown, N. Y., early last September, would fill a book. I happened to be in Cooperstown at the time and marveled at her energy. Mrs. Sherfessee owns a nice old Cooperstown house high up above the mountainous shores of Otsego lake. She calls it a farm, and loves the summers there near her two daughters and nine grandchildren.

Going directly to Stockholm for the Exposition of Fine Arts in its declining days, she met Mr. Sherfessee, and together they flew to Berlin. There they entrained for Peiping, and other letters have described the trans-Siberian journey as a nightmare of discomfort and privation, but in Peiping they met some travelers who apparently had had a worse time.

Mrs. Sherfessee writes from a famous hill station near Manila, laid out by Daniel Burnham of Chicago, thirty years ago. She describes the glories of Manila bay, with vessels of all nations at anchor, the incomparable approach to Manila, the finest of all far eastern cities; wide boulevards stretching along the sea, bordered by palms, by hibiscus trees in flower, and low charming houses Spanish in design.

After getting good rooms looking out on the anchored ships and lovely waters, "and the glorious sight of our own flag floating everywhere—a real thrill," the Sherfessees motored to the Polo club, where the polo was in full flight, army men on fine ponies, against half American, half Spanish players. The games against a background of tropical palms and mangoes on an emerald field was watched by spectators rowed on low benches, men in white, women in lovely colors, clubhouse all bamboo and hanging ferns!

Tea in the Tropics.

Then, tea was set—in the light of a tropical sunset over an iridescent sea. The night drops swiftly here and draws a black velvet curtain over land and sea, pierced by cool stars. Says Mrs. Sherfessee, "This place has the Riviera backed up against the wall," except for distance. Lots of agreeable people for company and the old walled Spanish city for picturesqueness.

Forsythe Sherfessee, after graduating from Yale, went to the Philippines.

Miami, in Gay Attire, Watches Polo Matches

Many Chicagoans Among Winter Visitors.

MIAMI BEACH, Fla.—[Special.]—The wide brimmed Panama hat has come into vogue with the women of the social colony here as a result of the almost solid attendance of the colony at the daily polo matches.

The wide green field flooded with sunshine is one of the pleasantest features about the game and there is nothing nicer than one of the wide brimmed hats for the observer who wants the sun, but no too much sunshine.

The faint wave of coolness in the air recently has brought out a flood of pastel matching coats with frocks.

Among those watching the games was Mrs. John Hertz, whose husband rode one of the high stepping ponies out on the green. In Fred A. Poor's automobile were Miss Betty Poor and Miss Carol Norwood.

An event of the season, the Junior League annual ball, was held at the Roney Plaza gardens. An extremely large number of parties was seen at the tables which surround a Terraza floor with a beautiful cocoanut palm background.

Andalusian Dinner Dance.

Elated with the success of the recent Andalusian dinner dance of the Surf club, plans are being made by the club for another of the same type soon. The club was transformed for the dinner dance into a replica of old Seville. City walls, with huge doors leading to the bull ring, were erected at the south end of the swimming pool, which formed an imaginary lake bearing small Spanish boats for the occasion. Original posters from Barcelona advertising a bull fight were placed around the walls to add to the local color.

In the patio, where the dancing took place, twenty large Spanish shawls were hung between the pillars and large Spanish fans spread open about the pillars. Orange and red lights played upon the scene.

All attendants were attired in Spanish costumes and the menu consisted of native dishes prepared by Spanish cooks, the cards being printed in native language. Music for the dancing and special numbers carried out the theme.

Among the Chicagoans sighted about the beach recently were: Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Murchison, guests of Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Elston Jr. A number of parties have been given in honor of the Murchisons since their arrival here.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Ash are guests at the Roney Plaza.

Chicagoans at Miami.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Reynolds are entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Orville J. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Upham, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Walker, Mr. and Mrs. K. Van Rensselaer Nichol, and Peter Berkey, at their cottage at King Cole hotel grounds.

Msgr. John J. Code, Miss Etta M. Code, his sister, and the Rev. George Code, his brother are here.

Other guests are Mrs. E. A. Thomas and her daughter, Miss Evelyn Thomas.

Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Sharpe have as their guests at the Roney Plaza Mrs. James Oliver Curwood and Mrs. James Oliver Curwood Jr.

The Woman's Exchange of Chicago held an exhibition at the home of Mrs. Fred Tod, on Collins avenue.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

and went into the department of forestry there. In many of the developments of Manila he was intimately concerned twenty-five years ago. The letter continues that their cottage, next door to the Baguio Country club, is "big as a minute," with an open fireplace and a delicious odor of pine logs burning.

There is a road up 5,000 feet through the mountains, with amazing twists and turns, that takes one from the tropics into the temperate zone, 180 miles from Manila. The whole country was crammed with people in little houses for over Christmas. The governor general, Mr. Davis, it seemed, was nearby in the Mansion house, distributing beautiful bouquets to his neighbors on Christmas.

The Sherfessees were taking a trip to Bontoe and to the more remote provinces, "where one sees more of native life, head hunters," etc., with scenes of indescribable beauty, blue peaks, deep, dark valleys in between, and sublime views. They passed many natives, fine bronzed men, their women carrying the burdens in baskets, bananas or whatever, strapped to their foreheads, and held by sarongs wrapped tightly around their hips.

Again, they went to a midnight mass, Christmas eve, in a little chapel built on a lovely mountain road. It was filled with Iggorotes, men on one side, women on the other, singing our hymns in English with real enjoyment. The place was packed. The chapel had just been finished by a gift in memory of Bishop Brent, from united offerings in the United States, and this was a great occasion. It seems that 80 per cent of the Filipinos are getting education now from the good public schools. The Sherfesses' next jump is to India.

An International Theater.

The International theater of Chicago has been holding the Goodman stage the last week. Mrs. Howard Linn, who is one of the two charming artists in one of the plays, tells me that this theater is rather unusual, there being only three in the world, one in Peiping, one in Paris, and this one. The plays this year are French. One called "Poil de Carrottes" is given by a French cast, but "Une Nuit d'Auberge" more intimately concerns the world which amuses itself. In it Mrs. Laird Bell [Natalie Fairbank] takes the part of a retired French actress of the 18th century, who has led a very frisky life. Mrs. Linn has the lines of a young widow whose husband was an admirer of the actress. Frenchmen take the parts of husband, son, and lover, and there is much dash to the plot, and delicate comedy from the ladies. Prof. George Cauuet thinks he has calmed the plot of "Une Nuit d'Auberge" down and made it holy, and perhaps he has. But in any case the costumes and setting are lovely ones of the 18th century and tomorrow afternoon is a special matinée at which the north shore women [who always come in town on Monday] will fill the theater. And a very gay and pleasurable time will be had. As one of my friends remarked, "Won't it be glorious to see those two charmers, Lucy and Natalie, acting together?"

That same night, Monday, I expect to go to the Goodman again to hear the concert for the newly formed Society of Contemporaneous Music—"Contemptible Music," Arthur Bissell says the hard-shell classicists call it, which will be the most fashionable musical event of February, anyway, and perhaps of the winter.

I seem to have spent much time at the Goodman of late, among the novelties being "The Playwrights Theater" benefit. I am told they paid expenses and a little over. Alice Gerstenberg was indisposed, but the players carried on, notwithstanding.

Pirandello Expected.

Helen Walton's satirical farce, "The Great Asset," was given, a Chinese fantasy, in which the costumes were superb and the squeaking of the Chinese actors intriguing beyond anything. I don't know now what it was all about, except that it was cleverly written. Mrs. Walton herself did some excellent acting in a play called "The Claw," by Jean Sartene, a lugubrious drama of French peasants, smocks, sabots, wine of Burgundy, and double murder, neatly done.

The Italian consul general, Commander Castruccio, says that he is expecting Pirandello, the great Italian playwright, before long. It seems that he is coming for the world premiere at the Goodman theater of his latest play, "Lazarus." This will make a great theatrical gesture, and also a social stir, as Mr. Castruccio says that luncheons and dinners will be given for him and things turned upside down, generally, in his honor. Mr. Pirandello's appearance will give those women a chance who are perishing to know what he meant by "As You Desire Me." I daresay he won't tell any more than the man who wrote "The Lady or the Tiger." It wouldn't be good business. Once the author's idea is known, the play would be finished as a worked out cross word puzzle.

Dr. Gordon Laing of Chicago university, speaking the other night at the Casino supper for the Drama league, paid his respects to Pirandello and others, with great geniality in a talk labeled "From an Orchestra Chair." He told of his own early experience with things dramatic at the age of 12 and upwards, when his rôle was invariably "maid-of-all-work"; done expertly, we surmise. The audience was on its toes when he said "LySIStrata" instead of the every day pronunciation to which it had become accustomed, and when he deplored the revival of this comedy of Aristophanes, saying he thought "Mr. Coburn should be crucified for so debasing himself," there was, indeed, excitement among those present.

And then Dr. Laing took up the great mystery play of the great Pirandello. In this he found Judith Anderson at her apogee and her "jag" in the first act superbly done—and a proof she had always gone in the best society. The portrayal of masculine drunks was mediocre and unconvincing by comparison. He solved Pirandello's riddle very obligingly by saying that the author evidently wished to show up men as despicable as Bruno.

To and from China.

Much coming and going between ourselves and China, this year. People going, people coming. Mr. and Mrs. John A. Carpenter are taking their deferred trip late in February. Robert Allerton is already there with his adopted son, John Gray, the charming young man who perhaps will ultimately bear his name, and thereby become heir to great wealth and responsibilities. Robert Allerton inherited a large fortune from his father, Samuel M. Allerton of Chicago. He is in reality an Illinois farmer of high fashion and charm, with a lovely manor house in the southern part of the state. His house parties are famous. His pictures are rarely curious. His taste in art is unsurpassed.

And still another painting man in town, this time a handsome Austrian, Carl Theodore Von Blaas of Vienna, who brought letters to Mrs. Linn from Princess Hohenlohe and others, and from our precious Mrs. L. Hamilton McCormick in New York. Mrs. John Carpenter had him supping Sunday, Mrs. Waller Borden had him dining Monday with a large party, and Mrs. Samuel Insull has a tea for him this afternoon.

Mr. Von Blaas speaks good English and, furthermore, has already many Chicago friends, as he had a studio in Munich years ago with David Adler and Abram Poole, and anyone who knows Chicago knows how many charming Pooles are still among us. Also, David Adler, who is busy in town this winter, as it happens. Mr. Von Blaas does portraits in sepia—none very large, but all very lovely. The kind of thing one finds in lovely boudoirs on the continent.

I love his painting of Princess Hohenlohe, the former Mrs. Gifford Cochran. An aureole of fluffy white hair, broad dark brows, and great dreamy blue eyes, and a slender throat. The portrait of Anita Loos, childlike and intriguing. One of Count Szchenyi's youngest daughters [he is Hungarian minister at Washington], one of Prince d'Ligne's daughters, former Belgian envoy, and another of Miguel de Braganza, young half American princelet, Herbert Pulitzer's children and an amusing double portrait of Beverly Bogert and Leonard Replogle playing backgammon are among the outstanding.

A New York Adventure.

Mr. Von Blaas had a very amusing, not to say thrilling and movielike adventure in New York last month when he was calling upon the Hamilton McCormicks at Pierre's. The McCormicks' apartment is high up in this newest, most chic hotel.

As Mr. Von Blaas had put on his coat and was leaving Mrs. McCormick invited him to step out upon a balcony and admire a superb view over Central park. They admired and admired, and suddenly a draught snapped the windows shut behind them, and there was no way of reopening them from the outside! There they were, trapped 20 stories from the street, a January wind blowing wild and free, and Mrs. McCormick hatless and wrapless. Mr. McCormick, safely inside, had vanished.

Mr. Van Blaas offered to emulate Harold Lloyd and become a human fly on the face of the building to summon aid, but Mrs. McCormick would not hear of this, nor would she allow him to break the window. Happily, after twenty minutes of perplexity, Mr. McCormick heard unusual sounds on the balcony and, investigating, saved his charming wife, we hope, from a bad cold.

Arts Club in Party Dress.

The Arts club was all dressed up in its party clothes on Sunday night when the buffet supper was on, and Segovia, the world's greatest guitarist, was to play. This party dress is a large rug woven in Algeria of a strange shade of pale yellow figured in scrolls along its border of gray and also of black splashed with white. Ethereal flowers everywhere in vases in palest greens and white, glistening like frost, and on the walls Foujita's foxy cats, delicately framed. A black and white screen in huge stripes, and one chair was stage de'cor for Segovia. Also a miraculous little footstool for his left foot.

All about were small tables and gilt chairs at which to make merry after having wangled food from the buffet. This in the form of cold meats, salads, fromage, a hot dish of Italian origin, hot rolls, café, tartlettes, all beautifully served and amusing. Then, a rather long wait for the solemn Segovia. When he appeared, ministerial and somber, with long black hair like Senator Borah and a frock coat, the auguries for a gay evening were not so good. He was introduced and the audience exhorted to intense silence.

Then began a classical program: Bach, Paganini, Tarrega on the guitar, only it wasn't one. Perhaps it was a lute, in any case a very fine and restrained instrument, and Segovia's fat white hands industriously plinked and plinked, while one-half the audience sat entranced, and the other half was wondering what it was all about. It was ever thus.

To be perfectly confidential, to me it sounded like somebody playing Bach on a Jew's harp in a distant wood. But it was the most refined and precieux entertainment I have ever attended. A gallant near me remarked that the Spanish unsmiling musician had "all the arrogance of Aragon and none of the soft soap of Castile" in his makeup—whatever that may mean, and further prodded Walter Brewster, who was in a delighted trance over his recollections of Spain, asking him if Segovia hadn't smiled a little over the Brewster cheque a year ago, after their party.

Mrs. Carpenter had Segovia and Foujita for supper, and others, and Mrs. Hubert Burnham came in very late with the Chamberlains and Countess Whatever and her son, but they were lost in the large company. Mrs. Burnham is a lovely blonde, and the only woman I know in the society of Evanston-Chicago who has clothes made the way she likes them, and not the way the modiste likes them. Thus, she wears lovely velvets and brocades, exotic gauzes, beautiful rich colors, and is always a striking picture.

Mrs. Morris Johnston, most handsome of brunettes, was wearing at the Spanish musicale a black crêpe evening gown printed in vivid greens and yellows, very smart and becoming. And, too, I met Mrs. Charles Swift, the charming Claire Dux, in a yellow brocaded frock with short sleeves nearly all chinchilla fur, looking so pretty.

Vogue for Short Fur Jackets May Aid Trade Balance

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The vogue of the short fur jacket and much fur trimming on coats may help restore the balance on furs worn by women which in 1929 suffered a sharp decline.

Fewer fur garments were made for women in 1929 than in 1927, says the bureau of census. There was a decrease of more than $25,000,000 that year in fur coats for women.

Fur neck pieces, however, showed a gain of more than 50 per cent in 1929, as well as other fur trimmings.

Two Cents Too High.

CANBERRA.—(AP)—There is much disappointment in government circles because an Argentine firm underbid Australian producers on a big contract for furnishing meat to the Italian army. The South Americans shaded Australian prices by two cents a pound.

New Yorkers Pay Visits to Newport

NEWPORT, R. I.—[Special.]—Visiting here is Mrs. Beverly Bogert, who is staying at Pine Lodge while inspecting Anglesea, her Ochre Point estate. The adjoining estate, Fairholme, bought by Count and Countess Alfonso P. Vigo from Mrs. John R. Drexel, is almost in readiness for occupancy.

Mr. and Mrs. O. Eaton Cromwell, who are also putting their home in order for next season, have returned to New York after an inspection of their property, the former Mason residence.

Princess Miguel de Braganza has been here visiting her young sons, who are at Pine Lodge. Other visitors included Mrs. Samuel Adams Clark and Mrs. D. A. McMillen.

Sees Easy Flying Future.

PARIS.—(AP)—It soon will be easier to fly a small touring plane than to drive an auto, says M. Verdurand, a French leader in aviation. Slotted wings, he thinks, will bring this result.

Fashion's Whims Bring "Wealth" to Chinese Women

SHANGHAI.—(AP)—Fashion's whims have brought prosperity to the women of Chekiang province, who can now count on earning two whole dollars a week by weaving hat bodies for the fashionable milliners of Paris and New York.

The Chekiang weavers, skilled in making cheap Chinese hats, entered the "big money" class when fashion approved Filipino hats, and it was found that the Chekiang woman quickly become skillful in working with the tree fibers from the Philippines.

Fashionable milliners sell the hats for from 5 to 10 times what the weavers receive, but the latter are well satisfied. They can make a hat in six or seven days, and the $2 they receive is twice what they would get in a factory or silk filature.

Winter Turns London Society Folk into Tourists on Continent

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON.—With dull impenetrable fogs hanging over London and frost in the country making hunting impossible, it is small wonder that Mayfair looks to the clear sunshine and exhilarating snows of Switzerland or the gay warm climate of the Mediterranean for its seasonal pleasures. Lady Fairhaven, the American mother of the young Lord Fairhaven, has left for Gibraltar where she will join her son's yacht, Sapphire, until spring smiles on the English lanes.

Lady Louis Mountbatten and Lady Brecknock, both of whom are partial to Palm Beach, are taking a cruise to the West Indies and will probably stop in America on the return journey. Viscountess Furness, née Vanderbilt, has left to join her husband who is hunting big game in East Africa. Lady Winifred Pennoyer, whose husband is in the American diplomatic service, has fled to sunny Spain. Sir John and Lady Lavery have been visiting at the Vice-Regal lodge in Dublin since Sir John's recovery from two minor operations and now they, too, are fleeing the dull days and will be at the Hotel Beau Site, Cannes, until the end of March.

The Marchioness Curzon of Kedleston has come back to No. 1 Carlton House terrace to await an improvement in the hunting weather. She has been having a series of shooting parties at Hackwood park, but shooting is over now and hunting holds the center of the stage. The earl and countess of Granard [née Beatrice Mills of New York] have returned to Forbes house until they feel sure the frost is out of the way before they return to Ireland where their daughter is joint master of a pack. When the frost goes there will be an exodus to the hunting boxes and there will be much "horsey" entertaining, but in the meantime sporting people must content themselves with cozy little parties in town and the London theater. The number of charity balls has dwindled to almost nothing and subdebs are being prepared for the next London season at the hunt balls in her marriage Miss Tanis Guinness expects to live in New York.

Period of Court Mourning.

The death of the princess royal and the period of court mourning has done much to make a dull season even more dull. Any larger entertainments which were on the calendar were, of course, canceled and there will be no official entertaining at the embassies or legations or by the lord mayor.

The title of "princess royal" is at the moment in abeyance, but there is every expectation that it will be given Princess Mary, countess of Harewood. From the time of George II., it is a title which has been borne by the eldest daughter of the king and was borne without royal warrant. In 1905 the precedent was created for giving it by royal warrant and the late princess royal received it as the eldest daughter of Edward VII. some four years after the death of the Empress Frederick of Germany, who was the former princess royal. There cannot be two people bearing the title at the same time and there is every probability that it will pass to Princess Mary by royal warrant in the near future.

The death of the king's sister makes the Princess Arthur of Connaught tenth in the line of succession to the throne.

To the casual observer it would seem that London has "gone oriental" this winter. First we had the Indian conference with the color and grandeur of India before us in life. Now that is gone, but its place has been taken by things Persian. With the opening of the Persian exhibition we have had a series of Persian parties and then the shops began showing Persian bridge coats and Persian trimming and even Persian pajamas! The Jewelry shops have all become experts and exponents of Persian ornaments, and every house in London will, I am sure, invest in one of the thousands of Persian rugs now on the market.

Irish Hunting Season.

Ireland seems to be particularly gay with hunts and hunt balls this season. There has been a return of the old time splendor and a revival of entertaining traditions for the social activities in hunting circles at this time of the year. It also seems to have come into its own as a place for romance. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Field set the example by slipping off there for part of their honeymoon.

The death of Mrs. Benjamin Guinness was a blow to London society, for few women can more rightly claim the title of a great London hostess than she. Her big double house in Carlton House terrace was the scene of some of the most beautiful and extensive entertaining in London since the war. Her daughter, Tanis, is to marry the Hon. Mr. Drogo Montagu, the second son of Lord Standwich, some time next month, and her other daughter married a Chilean artist, and is Madame Guevara. After

ENGAGED

MISS MARGARET I. L. LEEKA.
[Frederick Photo.]

Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Leeka of Gary, Ind., announce the engagement of their daughter, Margaret Ida Lillian, to Richard Ernest Elliot, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Elliot of Goshen, Ind. Miss Leeka is a former student of Starrett School for Girls and is now an Alpha Xi Delta at the University of Illinois. Mr. Elliot will graduate in June from Illinois, where he is a member of Beta Theta Pi fraternity.

nursing home so that she can be nearer the doctors. Her twin daughters are in the best of health, but no one seems to be interested in them since the condition of the mother took such a serious turn after their birth. Her 2 year old son and the babies are staying at Denham with Sir Oswald and Lady Cynthia Mosley, M. P., who is Lady Alexandra's sister. With the opening of parliament they will probably all come back to town.

With the passing of the children's holidays we give up for one more year all the season's pantomimes and to none do we say good-by more reluctantly than to the revival of "Alice in Wonderland." And this year we had a visit from the real Alice! She is an old lady now and for the last fifty years she has been Mrs. Reginald Hargreaves, but she is Lewis Carroll's Alice. Her brother, Sir Francis Liddell, and her cousin, Lord Ravensworth, are both well known in the parliamentary world. Lewis Carroll [C. L. Dodgson] has been dead some thirty years, but Alice is alive and well.

Though she is a woman of wealth, she dresses plainly, though not severely. If she is half as distinguished looking and beautiful and good as Mrs. Stillwell herself, she will be a model first lady. Speaking of first ladies reminds me to say that we hear that Mrs. Abraham Lincoln is much better of the nervous disability which has afflicted her for more than a year. She has been in a sanitarium for some time, but is going about as usual.

Have I mentioned the marriage of Miss Katharine Medill to Robert S. McCormick? It was one of the handsomest weddings in a season of notable marriages. Both families are well known and honored here, so it attracted much attention. I am writing too long a letter, as usual.

Lovingly yours,
MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

Etchings at Art Institute

Current Show Has Grown from Moderate Beginning to International Importance.

By Eleanor Jewett.

FOR twenty-one years Bertha E. Jaques has been the power behind the throne as far as the enormous success attending the growth of the Chicago Society of Etchers is concerned. Those of us who have followed the annual exhibitions of the society in the print rooms of the Art institute know this well. She has prodded and dared and challenged and dug and enthused others with her own infinite enthusiasm until the society from a moderate beginning has become one of the most important associations in the world. Artists from everywhere send prints to the annual show in Chicago simply because they know and trust Mrs. Jaques.

During the exhibitions each year [the present exhibition is now current in the Art institute print rooms] Mrs. Jaques has been in charge practically alone, occasionally with an assistant, and the marvelous results which have been obtained in public interest and consequent sales have been largely due to her efforts. If the yearly exhibits had been her child she could not have given them more loving or constant care. As it is obviously impossible for all the prints sent from abroad or from at home to be hung in the limited space allowed the society, Mrs. Jaques some years ago instituted a helpful reserve. In a case in the back room she held etchings other than those on the walls, but by the same juried artists.

It is impossible for a jury to please every one's taste when making selections. Therefore, over and over, if you or I or some one of the public saw on the wall the etching by a man or woman whose work we liked but whose particular example we were not keen about, we could go to Mrs. Jaques and say, "Have you anything else of So-and-so's?" She would take us to her reserve table and look through the prints. Sometimes she had several, sometimes just one other subject by the same artist.

Handbook on Etching.

The sales were credited to the society and the institute, just as if we had bought the etching from the wall. Many times we would buy from the reserve and from the wall. The annual exhibit has been a gold mine to the enthusiastic public and the enthusiasm has been kept alive by this chance at the extra etchings.

Also Mrs. Jaques finding the need for it, wrote a handbook on the craft and art of etching which to the gratitude of literally thousands has been displayed and could be bought during the Chicago Society of Etchers show. The book was easily to be understood, small enough to slip into an overcoat pocket, comprehensive, and one of the best guides to etching that has been published. The cost was small and Mrs. Jaques only too willing to give the entire proceeds from its sale to the Art institute and the society.

This year you may go to the exhibition and ask to see a print not on the walls; there is no reserve. You may go this year and ask for the handbook on etching; it is not there.

The print department of the institute wrote Mrs. Jaques a letter before the exhibition was due to open. The letter did indeed give recognition to the labor, enthusiasm and single-purposed love which she has lavished for twenty-one years upon the society and its exhibits, but it also requested her not to carry a reserve of etchings, nor to show her book on etchings, as both these efforts were considered too "commercial" by those in authority.

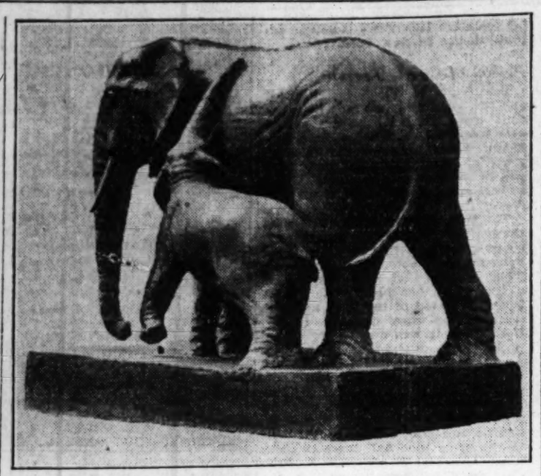
Freedom from Critics.

This is a department of the same museum where the director, Mr. Harshe, at a recent dinner to Chicago artists, said in approximate words "that if the critics left us alone, this show might be successful." The etching show under Mrs. Jaques has invariably been "successful." It has sold thousands of dollars' worth of prints ach year. The sales have been almost entirely due to her and her management.

Mrs. Jaques is resigning her charge after this show; there will never again be a reserve of prints for those of us who love prints.

If the sales are cut to a shadow of their former self we may give thanks to the Art institute. If the interest in the show is dulled, we may give more thanks to the Art institute. If any one who permits himself to become too much interested in the fortune of an Art institute activity is ruthlessly cast off, we may again thank the museum powers for their business methods.



"JUNGLE BABY," by Margaret James, an appealing group in the sculpture division of the Chicago Artists exhibition current in the east wing galleries of the Art institute. Margaret James is a talented pupil of Viola Norman, whose Chicago School of Sculpture, opened this fall, is filling a long felt need. Among the other sculptors whose work maintains the high standards which year by year we find in this exhibit are Elisabeth Haseltine with a tiny exquisite nude, "Spring," Oscar J. W. Hansen, Enrico Glicenstein, John David Brcin, Edouard Chassaing, C. Warner Williams, and Elizabeth Tuttle Holsman.

Business and Art.

Business methods gave recognition this year to a name, not a picture, in the current Chicago artists' exhibit upstairs in the institute. Business methods have a stranglehold, apparently, upon all issues which arise in any of the art enterprises the museum shelters. A smoke screen of impenetrable silence kills all discussion. An attack is quenched by the indifference with which it is received. Yet we make one more effort: Who was really back of the letter sent to Mrs. Jaques? Who stirred up the Art institute authorities to kill an interest and devotion which made for the success and growth of a most important factor in our annual art season?

And one more thing. When will the Art institute officials acknowledge that the success they speak of in public and want is exactly the same success they disparage and disown when some one not in their camp calls it commercial? A gallery that does not sell its pictures is not a success. You can estimate the strength of a gallery by its sales. Who wants to show a picture with no chance of a buyer? The museum must combine two factors, a selling power and an educational power. The temporary galleries, those upstairs where the paintings and sculpture are exhibited, and those downstairs where the etchings are shown, and those further down where handicrafts are displayed, those are the selling galleries. To call them by any other name is to blind yourself to one of their essentials. The rest of the museum that houses the permanent collections is educational. The temporary galleries have that much of the educational that they show us something of what is going on today. Still, hand in glove with any esthetic or altruistic reasoning, walks their more stalwart factor, sales possibility.

Announce Prize Awards.

Prize awards have been announced in the current Chicago Society of Etchers' exhibit. The Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Logan bronze medal and $100 went to "Reading Room," by Stanley Anderson; the second Logan prize of $75 went to "End of the Day," by Harry Morley; the third Logan prize of $50 went to "Mound of the Fortress," by Doris Boulton. The prints purchased so far for the Art institute collection comprise "Morning on the Seine," by Stanley Anderson; "New England Winter," by Kerr Eby; "Queer Fish," by John Paul Jensen; "Arch: Midnight," by Martin Lewis; "Old Brentford," by Noel Spencer; "The Plaintiff's Case," by S. Van Abbe, and "Kensington," by Geoffrey H. Wedgwood. The society's prize for the best print by one of its members went to "New England Winter," by Kerr Eby.

Recent drawings by Flora Schofield and brush drawings by A. Raymond Katz were put on view in the Increase Robinson Studio gallery in the Diana Court building last Tuesday for two weeks.

An exhibition of original woodcuts by Clare Leighton may be seen in the Roullier gallery through Feb. 10. Clare Leighton is one of the most powerful factors in English prints today.

The art department of the Chicago Woman's Aid announces an exhibit of paintings by Clara MacGowan, an instructor in art in Northwestern university, during the month of February. The exhibit is open to the public Wednesday afternoons from 2 to 5 o'clock and Saturdays from 9 to 5 o'clock.

Curreent Shows on Exhibit.

Paintings by George Waller Parker were placed on view last Wednesday in the Carson Pirie Scott galleries, to be seen through the month.

Magnificent paintings by Frank V. Dudley, some brilliant pictures of the southwest by Carl Hoerman, and a group of charming water colors by Albert Worcester may be seen in the Chicago galleries, 220 North Michigan avenue.

Delightful paintings of women and cats by Fujita are on view at the Arts club. Joan Miro shares the galleries, but his contribution is so little significant that one might almost say Fujita stands there alone.

Katherine Patton, a member of the staff of the National Academy of Art, is enjoying a one man show of water colors in the Pekin public library, Pekin, Ill.

Japanese panels, beautifully painted on silk, are on exhibit in the Kroch gallery. There are about forty-five panels. The artists are Hoko Murakami, Toyomaru Imato, Shoku Nakayama, Kosen Ito, and Kakusen Takat. The last two were honored by the emperor and painted in his presence. These artists have exhibited and won prizes in the Imperial salon, Japan.

The ninth annual exhibit of the Chicago No-Jury Society of Artists will be held from March 7 to March 21 at 211 West Wacker drive.

Two interesting prints by Forain may be seen in the O'Brien galleries and some brilliant etchings by Levon West.

The Austrian Werkbund has an interesting exhibit of pottery heads and enamel pictures, these last most unusual. The various objects are sufficiently modernist in tempo to be somewhat depressing.

Brahms' Fourth Symphony Joins List of Newly Recorded Music

By Edward Moore.
[Tribune Music Critic.]

NO orchestral program ever puts out its announcement with a complete trust that it has done all that should be done unless it has a full length symphony somewhere in its course. The loftiest of brow among the conductors frequently put it first and sometimes order the doors closed until its end; the more merciful sometimes play an overture first and then allow late coming patrons to take their seats.

So there is excellent precedent for us of the records to have a few words about a symphony with no thought of closed doors. Brunswick has put out the fourth and final work by Brahms in that form, the one in E minor, opus 98. It is the Brunswick album number 24, and like a good many other of Brunswick's more elaborate recordings, is an importation.

Brahms' fourth is his most earnest and probably his most severe. Even the most ardent of the Brahmins will hardly question that its hearing requires the most constant and undivided attention. In fact there are times when one is inclined to sympathize with the remark made a few years ago by a sorely tried New York critic to the effect that a separate movement selected from each of the Brahms symphonies would make a symphony more attractive than any of the four, a synthetic process undoubtedly, but one productive of better results.

Technical Recording Fair.

The present recording has been made by the State Opera orchestra of Berlin under the direction of Max Fiedler, one time conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The explanatory booklet going with the set tells that Fiedler was a personal friend and something of a disciple of Brahms during his lifetime, and that his tempi can therefore be accepted as Brahms' own. The chief difference noticed is that the phrasings of the first movement are a bit more leisurely than Dr. Stock's, for example. The rest of the work moves along at a pace that we in America can accept as fairly orthodox. The technical recording is fair. There is a slight indication of an echo in the hall where it was done, and some of the solo instruments show up as considerably inferior to those of the best American orchestras, but the recording as a whole is no mean achievement.

Eleven sides are taken up by the symphony. The twelfth is turned over to the Quasi Minuetto movement from the string quartet in A minor, opus 51, number 2, played by the Buxbaum String quartet, also of Europe. It is somewhat clearer recording, as chamber music is likely to be, but hardly better music.

Roaming here and there among recent arrivals in the new records, one picks out Tschaikowsky's Fantasy-Overture for orchestra, "Romeo and Juliet," in two disks, 67868-D and 67869-D of the Columbia output. It is played by Willem Mengelberg and the Concertgebouw orchestra of Amsterdam, the same Mengelberg who up to the last season divided the season of the New York Philharmonic orchestra with Arturo Toscanini. Mengelberg is rated as one of the most studious and diligent conductors in existence, and it shows in this turgid but vigorous and melodious work. The recording is good.

Modern English Music.

Victor has also some good orchestral recordings. Nos. 9731 and 9732 present Frederick Delius' "In a Summer Garden" as played by the London Symphony orchestra under the direction of Geoffrey Toye. That is, three sides do. The fourth is "A Song Before Sunrise," also by Delius, but played by the New Symphony orchestra under the direction of John Barbirolli. They are agreeable if not transfiguring examples of modern English music, pleasant sounds that make no particular strain on the intellect.

Barbirolli shows up to rather better effect in Victor 9789, where, with his own chamber orchestra, he plays Mozart's serenade, called in the original, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." This is something that no admirer of Mozart can afford to be without. It is Mozart at his sunniest and most charming, and is a work that is infrequently played by symphony orchestras.

The above Victor notations refer to the Red Seal list. Still Victor, but out of that classification is 35974, where the National High School orchestra is heard under the direction of Joseph E. Maddy. The first is the famous "Song of the Volga Boatman" in what is called a choral-symphonic paraphrase arranged by Albert Stoessel. Only the symphonic part is heard, but that is not entirely satisfactory. Mr. Stoessel would have done better to take a hint from the way Chaliapin sings it as a solo. Perhaps that is why the young players of the high school orchestra do not sound to better effect. They are in much better form on the other side of the record, where they play two excerpts from Carl Busch's Ozarks Suite, "At Sunset," and "The Hill-Billies' Dance."

Notables Make Aerial Survey of Florida City

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.—[Special.]—Three flying governors and former governors, all members of the winter colony in this west Florida playground, captured the interest and imagination of winter guests this week when they made an aerial survey of St. Petersburg in the same plane. They were former Gov. Harry F. Byrd of Virginia, Gov. John Garland Pollard of Virginia, and former Gov. John Trumbull of Connecticut.

Another famous flyer and explorer, Admiral Richard Byrd, is expected to join his brother, Harry Byrd, here later in the season.

February promises to repeat the bright gala events of this month held last season. Chief among them will be the annual Valentine day ball at the Hotel Soreno, which is to be held at the end of this coming week, and for which the leaders of the Chicago group have already made their reservations.

Service Club Ball.

The young women of the Junior Service club, which includes many of the members of the younger set of visitors, will hold their annual cabaret ball on the 20th of this month with talent drawn from the membership. Outstanding during the last week was the tea dance and swimming party given by W. B. Mendel and Phil Sheridan, both of New York, at the newly opened Moorish pool at the Hotel Rolyat. Chicago was represented in the list of guests.

Baseball enthusiasts, anticipating the opening of the winter season of training by the New York Yankees and the Boston Braves, late this month, are looking forward to the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Ruth tomorrow. The famous baseball player will stop at the Hotel Jungle, where he will improve his golf game until time for active training gets under way.

Another event in sports and a focal point of interest this week was the arrival of the members of the British bowling team to open the competition for the international championship trophy. T. W. A. Hayward of Balham is captain of the British team and is leading the invasion by which it hopes to take the American cup.

Chicago Arrivals.

Among the arrivals from Chicago and the east during the last week were Miss Josephine Stockton of Evanston and Miss E. M. Edwards of Pittsburgh, who are being piloted on an airplane tour of the state by Capt. John Morris, also of Pittsburgh. They are at the Hotel Vinoy Park. Other arrivals at the Vinoy Park from Chicago included H. G. Zander and his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. K. M. Zander of Evanston; Mrs. F. R. Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Camp, Mrs. M. A. Farr, and Newton Farr.

Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Wagner of Chicago are among those joining the winter colony at the Hotel Soreno and Mr. and Mrs. Schuyler M. Sigler have also returned to the Soreno from Chicago for another winter season.

S. A. Gunderson and C. A. Norman of Oak Park are expected in the immediate future at the Hotel Don Ce-Sar to join Mrs. Gunderson and Mrs. Norman.

Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Bodine of Oak Park were among the guests at a dinner dance given Thursday at the Hotel Jungle.

Others arriving during the week from Chicago included: Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Ammann, 1418 Elmdale avenue; Mr. and Mrs. R. Beiersdors, 714 Buena avenue; Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Blohm, 2406 North Albany avenue; Mrs. Ellen Burgess, 5338 Monroe street; Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Campbell, 6846 Chappel avenue; Mr. and Mrs. E. Carstens, 9615 South Leavitt street; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Christopher, 2907 Edgewood avenue; Mrs. Guy Clark, 720 Rush street; Mrs. B. L. Dunbar, 6911 Bennett avenue; Mrs. F. S. Dunham, 6911 Bennett avenue; Mrs. B. J. Farwell, 410 Sherman street; Mrs. A. Gammell, 7618 Phillips avenue; Mr. and Mrs. John E. Glos, 2326 North Sawyer street.

WEDDED

MRS. LEON H. KRINGEL.

A. H. Gehrs of 4336 North Hermitage avenue announces the marriage of his daughter, Ruth Etta, to Leon H. Kringel of Oak Park. The bride is a graduate of the University of Illinois. Mr. Kringel attended Valparaiso and Iowa universities. They are residing in Oak Park.

DREAMS

Have you ever had a dream which later came true? If you care to see it in print address "Dreams," Chicago Tribune.

Premonition of Death.

Several years ago I had an intimate friend attending our state university. She had spent her holiday vacation at home and twice during that time I dreamed she boarded a train switching backwards, as her friends stood by, crying.

On her return trip to college she was instantly killed when the train on which she was riding was wrecked while going backwards. B. B.

Yes, It Was a Nice Dream.

I had a nice dream the other night. I dreamed that I dropped some change in the snow and I stooped to pick it up. I found $5 and $10 bills besides a lot of change. The next day my brother, taking a short cut through the alley to his friend's house, found a $5 bill, and now I know some dreams come true. M. T.

Chile's Riviera Prepares for Wales' Visit

Ready to Compete with Nice and Monte Carlo.

VINA DEL MAR, Chile.—(AP)—Preparing to welcome the prince of Wales late in February, this center of the Chilean Riviera is entering a red letter season.

From most of the South American countries and even from Europe and North America tourists and "season residents" are arriving on every ship and international train.

The government is backing resort managers in their effort to provide recreation equal to that found in the "Cote d'azur" of the Mediterranean around Monte Carlo.

The municipal authorities of Vina, the shortened name by which this resort city is known, intend that the heir to the British throne shall take away only pleasant memories after his visit here.

* *

New Casino Built.

They have enlarged and improved the bathing establishments, sports facilities, and social centers.

But the major improvement is a new casino, where roulette and other games of chance may be played. This establishment replaces the smaller one at the nearby Recreo beach.

Gambling will be operated on the same general scheme as that used along the French Riviera, and the Vina casino hopes to wage successful competition with Nice and Monte Carlo, which have their seasons at the same time of year.

Vina, pronounced "Vinya," in addition to the palace of chance, offers tennis, golf, polo, bathing in ocean or pool, yachting, deep sea fishing and automobiling.

* *

Near "Lesser Andes."

Roads lead to neighboring mountains, the "lesser Andes."

Vina Del Mar is situated to the northeast of Valparaiso bay and to the left of the stream of the same name. The population is about 50,000 the year around, but in the season from December to April it rises to about 100,000.

This year more than 50 chalets have been built for Argentines alone. Visitors have registered from European countries and not less than 1,000 American tourists are expected during the season.

The Prince of Wales visited Vina on his previous trip to Chile several years ago, and the natives hope to surprise him with the changes since then.

Halt Women's Worship.

ISTANBUL. — (AP) — Thirty pious women, caught lighting candles in the tombs of sultans, were arrested as part of the Turkish government's drive against taboo Islamic practices. The republic closed the tombs three years ago because it considered them of political significance.

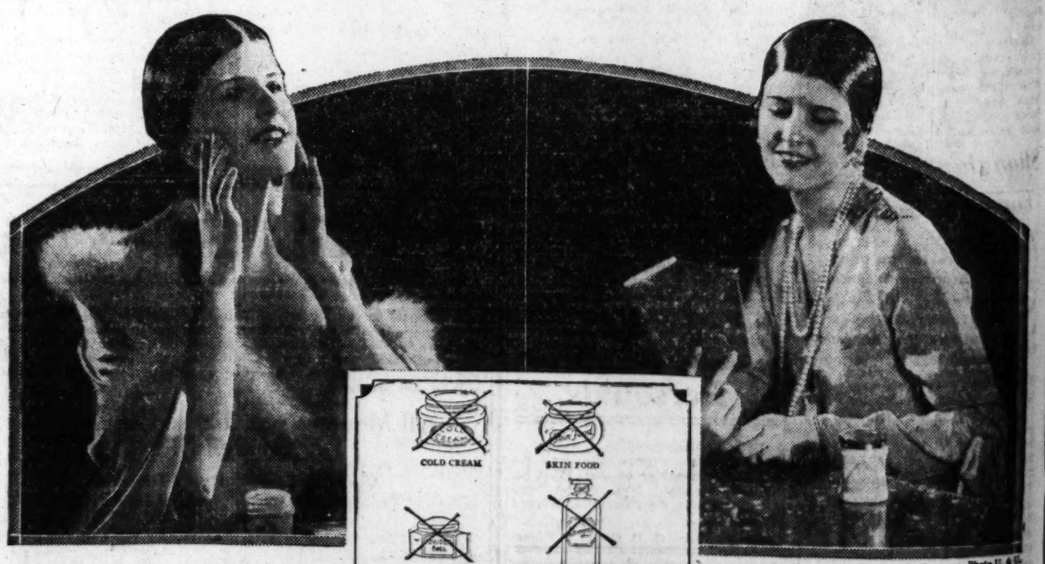
Why Women Are Quitting Cold Creams, Skin Foods and Astringents



The four fundamentals of skin care are condensed in one unique creation.

The exact results of a costly professional facial are obtained in 3 minutes or less.

A Wholly NEW and Amazingly Simplified Way In Skin Care That Condenses a COMPLETE PROFESSIONAL FACIAL Into a Single, 3-Minute Home Application Embodying The 4 Fundamentals of Skin Care That Leading Skin Experts Urge!

NOW comes a remarkable new development in beauty science. A discovery that many experts say will soon change all previous methods in skin care.

A way that condenses the four fundamentals of scientific skin care into a single, three-minute home application. And that provides the exact, same effect of a Complete Professional Facial costing $3 or more.

What It Does

It scientifically combats blackheads and enlarged pores. Combats them often with almost unbelievable results. It banishes premature age lines, and the lines of strain and worry. For each application works directly on each of these conditions.

It completely eliminates the use of costly special creams and lotions. Of old-time cleansing creams, of skin foods and astringents. For the functions of all four are embodied in this one unique creation.

Do you wonder, then, that largely on expert advice, tens of thousands of women are adopting it?

What It Is

It is called Lady Esther Four-Purpose Cream. And it marks the application of totally new principles in skin care as defined by the most recent scientific findings of ablest specialists in the field of beauty culture.

Each application has four distinct actions on the skin.

Cleansing action that cleanses the pores. And thus ends the use of an ordinary cleansing cream.

Tissue stimulating action that invigorates the deep tissues of the skin. And thus that ends the use of a special "Skin Food."

Astringent action that eradicates worry, strain and premature age lines, refines pores. And thus that makes the use of youth creams and astringents a folly.

Softening action that forms a perfect base for powder. And thus banishes the need of a powder base.

How To Obtain

It is on sale under the name of Lady Esther at all drug and department stores at 50 cents and $1.25 a jar. The $1.25 size contains four times the amount in the 50 cent size.

Or if you wish to avoid delay you may send the coupon below with 10 cents for a 10-day tube of this unique creation.

Holes in Hills Provide Our Best Tobacco

Weird Cuban Caves Are Carved Out of Rock.

HAVANA, Cuba. — [Special.—Romance and mystery, holes in the hills—that is the secret, in a great many instances, of the meaning of Cuban cigar labels or trademarks which most of the English speaking people do not understand. Connected with them is a quaint story of a little known section of Cuba.

Western Cuba, and in fact nearly all of the Pinar del Rio section, is dotted with "hoyos," or holes, and some of the finest tobacco in the world is grown in them. Cigars advertise the "hoyo" in which their tobacco is grown.

The Organo mountains, which dominate Pinar del Rio province, are full of caves which at one time were the courses of subterranean streams, and of open "sinks" eroded picturesquely. The softer cream and limestone formations which, laid upon a hard blue limestone, form the range, are susceptible to the action of water.

American residents around San Cristobal make picnic excursions to an immense amphitheater-like cavern above that town. Residents of Taco Taco point out the location of "Indian caves" in the mountains opposite. There are caverns at "The Portals," where San Diego river has swept through natural stone barriers which once dammed it into a lake, as hewn stones may be used again for irrigation purposes.

There are caves and "sinks" within easy riding distance of Pinar del Rio city. One particularly strange set of deep little valleys is to be found in the hills known as the Sierra del Infierno; these are honeycombed with caves eaten into the yielding rock. Roads leading that way dwindle into a trail persisting up and down steep slopes, along the tops of narrow ridges from where the wide views of exquisite landscapes and even of the Caribbean sea to the south are to be had. Suddenly the path drops into a valley so narrow that it is in fact but a deep gorge not more than a stone's throw across.

Here, on fertile bottom lands an industrious guajiro [countryman] has built his hut and tilled for the planting of corn and tobacco in rotation. No wheeled vehicle could be of service in this neighborhood.

A little stream run the length of the valley, disappearing through a solid wall at its far end. Here the stream has worn a tunnel through rock; the tunnel is high and wide enough to permit the passage of horses wading along the creek itself in single file. Venturing through it so mounted, the explorer finds himself emerging into an unroofed circle, entirely shut in by white cliffs. He stands within what once was a cave; the top fell in long ago.

There is but the one entrance to the place, the narrow door by which he and the stream entered; there is no exit for him—the creek disappears into the earth through a series of crevices which are numerous in the surrounding walls.

Shanghai Burns Ton of Narcotics During Each Month

SHANGHAI.—(AP)—More than a ton of narcotics goes up in "smoke" each month in Shanghai. But it's not the smoke in opium dens.

Rather the narcotics are burned by Shanghai customs authorities following seizure of illegal shipments.

Despite the huge amount of narcotics seized and burned, that destroyed is a small part of the amount that actually finds its way into the city.

Huge quantities of narcotics pour into the International settlement, the French concession and the Chinese city through channels unknown to the authorities for reshipment to other parts of the country or for local consumption. The smugglers outnumber the authorities 100 to 1 and the struggle is almost fantastic.

Conditions are just as bad in Peiping and Tientsin.

Although raw opium from the interior of China constitutes the biggest share of the seizures made in Shanghai, there has been a decided increase in shipments of morphine and heroin within recent months.

Chinese habitués have developed a liking for those narcotics and they are on sale in most opium smoking dens.

Two seizures of morphine and heroin made in the same day netted the customs officials a ton and a half of contraband. The seizures were made on Italian vessels on the Genoa-Shanghai run that had put into port with passengers and cargo. The total value of the seizure was $1,500,000.

The conflagration that followed the seizures was the largest ever conducted by the Shanghai customs. Half a ton of opium seized from Yangtze river steamers was added to the morphine and heroin and a match touched to the lot at once. Approximately $2,000,000 went up in smoke.

The Rhyme of the Restless Rover

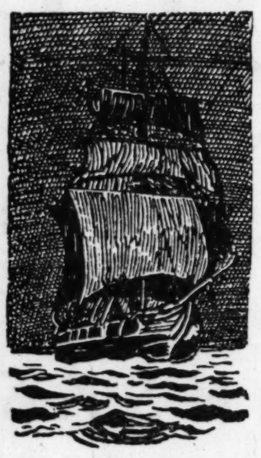
[Reprinted by request.]



As I sit at my desk in the fading light
Of a shivery, wintry day,
I think of the places I'd like to go
If I only could get away.

It might take more than a couple of weeks
For such an extensive tour,
For some of the places are far away
And connections might be poor,

I'd leave a call for seven o'clock;
I'd sleep with my clothing on;
I'd do my packing the night before,
And start in the cool of the dawn.

I'd then go aboard of a clipper ship
Engaged in the China trade;
We'd clear the bar by the morning star
As soon as the anchor's weighed.

I'd tell the skipper the course to set;
He'd pipe all hands aloft,
And away we'd go for Borneo,
Lunching at Tranby Croft.

Through creamy seas, 'neath sparkling skies,
I'd follow the Spanish Main;
I'd touch Stamboul and Stanley Pool,
If it didn't begin to rain.

Perhaps I'd dock at the Inchcape Rock,
Perhaps at the Farallones—
We'd raise Luzon in the rosy dawn
While the lazy trade wind drones.

I'd dance to the tune of the rigadoon,
And if the canvas fills,
We'd eat our tiffin at Annandale
In the shade of the Simla Hills.

The Persian Gardens at Ispahan,
The Reef of Norman's Woe,
Sierra Leone and San Antone
Are places I would go.

I'd guide a canoe in the Great Karroo,
I'd rollick in Bantry Bay;
By the golden moon, from old Rangoon,
I'd journey to Mandalay.

And Malabar Hill is not too far
If you go by the Andaman Isles;
I'd sniff the breeze from the Celebes
Where the Indian Ocean smiles.

Van Dieman's Land and Samarkand,
St. Alban's and Singapore—
You might easily reach on Rockaway Beach
From Bingen to Bangalore.

For it's always fair off Finisterre—
A Barrier pilot knows—
And it's not too far to Kandahar
If a steady monsoon blows.

It's never too late to pull your freight
For Rio and Argentine;
With a favoring breeze off the Hebrides
You can dock at the Engadine.

The Barbary Coast I like the most,
But the Ivory Coast is fine;
I'd shed my cares in the Aberdares
And dine on the Brandywine.

We'd heave the lead at Diamond Head
And if the holding's good,
We'd visit the shore "to look them o'er,"
As all good sailors should.

We'd drop the hook in the Zuyder Zee,
We'd touch at the Cameroons,
Connemara and London Town,
Bombay and the Shanghai Bund.

Zanzibar and the Chilkoot Pass;
Glengarry and Broken Hill;
The Ballyshannon and County Clare,
Calgary and Bougainville.

And Lapland too—it sounds to me
Like a sociable sort of place;
I'd study the moon with Lorna Doone,
Dining at Chevy Chase.

Majorca, Malacca and Malvern Hill,
Manila and Fuji San,
The County Tyrone and the Arctic Zone,
Carnarvon and Turkestan.

The Isle of Pines and the Dardanelles,
Kowloon and the Caspian Sea,
Cawnpore, Khiva, the Khyber Pass,
Crimea and Kimberley.

We'd follow the tide on the Hongkong side—
By a rickety sampan towed—
I'd walk chop-chop to a curio shop
Which I know in the Queen's High Road.

From Abyssinia down the coast—
Barbados to old Bahia—
Then up and away to Botany Bay,
With a day in Barranquilla.

I'd look at the glass in Limoon Pass,
And if the weather's fine,
We'd steer for the Don and Carcassonne
By way of the River Rfiine.

Delagoa, Samoa and Shenandoah
Are names that please the ear;
Victoria Nyanza strikes my fancy
And so does Monastir.

Maracaibo and Hyderabad,
Lucknow and the fair Touraine,
The Caribbean and far Kashgar
Are places I'd visit again.

Wind River, the Tana, the Yangtze-Kiang,
And the Plains of Abraham;
Siberia, India, Amazon, Oude,
Benares and Bethlehem.

The Azores, Antilles and Andijan,
Indiana and Tennessee,
The River Rhone and the Torrid Zone
Are spots that appeal to me.

Wanganui and Moyobamba,
Cashmere, Cartagena—
I'd cheerfully steer to Anadir
And possibly Magdalena.

I'd sing a song as we drift along
The Volga to Astrakhan,
I'd linger longer in Raratonga
And visit Afghanistan.

I'd finish the cruise at Newport News,
I'd wish no longer to roam;
I'd settle down—for a couple of weeks—
Contentedly at Irome.

Now, such a trip, I honestly think,
Would benefit any man;
He'd put more force in his work, of course,
And have a beautiful tan.

We'd drink a toast on the Congo coast
To the Inniskillen Dragoons,

Mashonaland and Xanadu,
Shiraz and the Hindu Kush
Are places where I would surely go
To escape the tourist push.

The Friendly Isles and Barbizon,
Bagdad and the River Plate,
Cockburn Land and the Rio Grande,
Gaboon and the Golden Gate.

The Orkney Isles and Lockerbie Street,
Peshawar and Mozambique—
While Far Cathay and Hudson Bay
I'd view from the mizzen peak.

Grindelwald and Brandenburg,
Savannah and Ootacamund,

Human Beasts of Burden Still Swarm Tartary

Part of Russia Strongly Non-Russian.

KAZAN, Tartar Soviet Republic, U. S. S. R.—[U. P.]—In the capital of Red Tartary, where the Kama river empties into the Volga, one realizes how non-Russian is part of Russia.

There are at least half a dozen racial groups in an area about as large as Germany. They are not only sharply differentiated from the Russians but also from each other.

There are some 1,300,000 Tartars in soviet Tartary, a bare plurality of the total population of the republic. They are chiefly on the eastern bank of the Volga and on its Kama tributary. On the western bank are about 400,000 Chuvashians, who also have their own autonomous republic. To the north lie the self-governing districts of the Cheremissians [also called Mari] and Votiaks, both Finnish offshots, about half a million of each. Beyond Tartary to the east is the vast republic of nearly 2,000,000 Bashkirs.

Only a Trace.

Broaden the limits somewhat and they include the Germans of the Volga German republic, the dispersed Moravians, the Kalmuks near the mouth of the Volga, not to mention the scattering of Jews, Ukrainians, and various races whose center is in the Ural region.

Nearly four centuries have passed since Ivan the Terrible conquered Tartary, yet the Tartar music had scarcely a suggestion of the Russian about it. The same is true of the other racial folk songs.

Prof. Nossa-Baer Versilin of the Kazan university, which numbers among its alumni Count Leo Tolstoy, Lenin, Lenin's brother Alexander, and Premier Rykov—told something about the past and present of Red Tartary

* *

Beasts of Burden.

The picture he unfolded of Tartar economical and cultural renaissance under the soviet policy of national autonomy added emphasis to the great historical change which has taken place on one of the world's greatest waterways.

But as he talked of the modern industries everywhere, of collectivization which is changing the century old ways of life, there was plenty to remind one that the past is still alive.

Every so often one saw those human beasts of burden, the Volga boatmen, straining against the ropes which harnessed them to a heavily laden barge—just like their forefathers.

A Real Handicap.

Few regions in Europe have to contend with as heavy a burden of poverty and backwardness as the Volga valley. The minority races were regarded for centuries merely as a source of profits to owners and landlords in Moscow, St. Petersburg and the Volga cities themselves. The most profitable stretches of land along the river banks were monopolized by Russians while the Tartars, Chuvashians, Cheremissians, etc., were forced further inland. Railroad routes were planned to draw products out of this region without bringing anything in return. The civil wars after the revolution, and the devastating famine of 1921, left marks which still disfigure the land.

This is the handicap which Red Tartary and its neighboring sister republics must overcome in their fight for improved conditions.

Strap Hangers in Berlin Walk to Save Penny

BERLIN.—(AP)—Five pfennigs, one and a quarter cents, is proving almost too great a burden for the straphangers of Berlin.

Comparison of street car, subway, and bus receipts before and after that much increase in fares made the cost of a ride six and a half cents, shows a big reduction in passengers.

As between November, 1930, and the same month of 1929, street car riders dropped from 69,600,000 to 51,700,000; subways from 18,900,000 to 17,900,000 to to 12,500,000.

Promote Papal Police.

VATICAN CITY.—(AP)—The 150 papal gendarmes now are commanded by a colonel instead of a captain. The former lieutenant was made a major and a full complement of line officers was named from the ranks.

British Mills Feel Effect of Boycott Started by Gandhi

BOMBAY, India.—(AP)—Great Britain has been the principal sufferer from the boycott instituted by Indian Nationalists.

How seriously it has affected foreign trade is shown by new government figures showing that in ten months the import of cloth fell off by 92,000,000 yards.

In many lines of merchandise Britain's place is being taken by the United States and Japan. Imported American automobiles, for example, constitute nearly 80 per cent of all motor cars brought to India—and only about 15 per cent are British.

And within seven months Japan exported to India 14,000,000 yards of bleached goods, against 5,500,000 in the same period last year.

Advertising Puns Are Barred from London Subway

LONDON.—(AP)—Officials of the London tube system have decided that bad puns in advertising have no place in subway cars and rejected posters for a play called "A Pair of Trousers."

"You must have a good seat for 'A Pair of Trousers'," read one poster—and the others were just about as funny.

Vegetarians Win Converts.

SYDNEY.—(AP)—Taking advantage of an acute meat shortage when slaughter house employés went on strike for a month, Sydney vegetarians made a big propaganda drive and claim to have made many converts.

SEEK BILLION DOLLAR PETROLEUM PRIZE

World Powers Battle for Oil in Ancient Iraq

Mosul Fields Date Back to Old Testament.

(This is the second of a series of articles by Mr. Shirer on the places encountered on an overland trip from India to England.)

By William Shirer.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MOSUL.—[Special.]—On the gently rolling hilltops south of here, already bejeweled with the steel girders of wells newly tapped, dwells old King Oil, ruler of the new nation of Iraq and sought after and scrapped over by the mighti est nations on the globe.

Twenty years ago the Americans, ably represented by Admiral Chester, a retired naval officer become business man, seemed to have the prize within grasp. Ten years ago the British and the French actually grabbed it as spoils in a victorious war.

Today these three great powers are trying to divide the booty, with Great Britain, not unnaturally perhaps, world politics being what they are getting the lion's share, and the United States and France being contented with a more modest portion.

Conquerors Can't Agree.

But even now, with the juicy bones in their paws ready to be devoured, two of the conquerors cannot agree on the details. Britain, naturally enough, wants the oil brought in a pipe line to the British Mediterranean port of Haiffa, also a spoil of war. And what more natural than France wanting its share of the oily substance brought to the French Mediterranean port of Beirut, likewise a spoil of the recent war?

America, in the confusion of the peace settlement having neglected to nab a port for itself, doesn't care very much to which dock the oil is pumped, providing it is pumped.

Iraq, the independent nation in whose back yard the oil lies, hasn't a thing in the world to say about it all. And Turkey, which owned the valuable site for 600 years, only to lose it by picking the loser in a world scrap, quite naturally is not even consulted. Turkey, like Iraq, is to receive some royalties—10 per cent, to be exact—but that bone hasn't much meat on it and the Turks still know a good bone when they see it.

* *

After All the Years.

It seems appalling, when you think of it, that the Mosul oil fields, which first began to be talked about by our biblical fathers in the Old Testament, and later by Herodotus in the course of his travels, still remains a bone of contention after all these years.

To all extents and purposes, however, the billion dollars' worth of fuel under the sod near here belongs to the Iraq Petroleum company, successor of the old Turkish Petroleum company. It is the same company with a new name.

After the war, when France and Britain were consolidating their newly acquired domains in the near east, they agreed upon the division of oil on the following basis:

	Pct.
Anglo-Persian Oil company (68 per cent capital held by British government)	50
Shell (listed as Dutch, but British controlled)	25
French interests	25

It was then that the American state department recalled that there had been some sort of American participation in the late war and that if pure spoils like oil were to be distributed among the victorious allies the United States must have its share.

So after a good deal of bickering a new division was arranged as follows:

	Pct.
Anglo-Persian Oil company (68 per cent capital held by British government)	23½
Shell (listed as Dutch, but British controlled)	23½
French interests	23½
American interests	23½
Mr. Gulbenkhian (Armenian financier who held first concession)	5
Turkey	1

* *

Conditions Change.

Thus for all practical purposes Britain got nearly half and France and the United States a little less than a fourth each.

The American share was divided equally among the following companies: Standard Oil of New York, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Gulf Refining company, Atlantic Refining company, Pan-American [subsidiary of Standard Oil of Indiana].

It seemed five years ago that this Franco-British-American concessionary company with a billion dollars' worth of oil under its feet was not exactly in a bad way. The petroleum was its for the taking, with only a royalty of a dollar a ton to be paid to the Iraq government, which in turn had to pay 10 per cent of that to placate the Turks.

But meantime an overproduction of world oil had changed the outlook. With plenty of petroleum on hand and prices pretty low, neither the United States nor Britain felt encouraged to increase the output.

Little Accomplished.

So, as the Iraq officials here tell me, the company stalled. Not much was done in Mosul. The Iraq government, needing money badly and not getting much, became irritated. It bluffed the company into an agreement to start operations. Within thirty-two months from the date of an accord drawn up in 1925, the company agreed to choose its twenty-four plots of eight square miles each, which was all that had been alloted to it, because it was believed at the time that this area would pretty well take in all the oil there was to be had.

The thirty-two months passed and little was done. The company complained that the exact boundaries north of Mosul not having been satisfactorily settled, it could not make a free choice of its plots.

Delay followed delay and to this day the plots have not been selected.

Politics can do a lot in the oil game, as the whole world has learned, and so it was not so very strange that a new factor arose to complicate the Mosul oil struggle still more.

That factor is the British Oil Development company, formed some two years ago to pick up the leavings around Mosul, if any, when the Iraq Petroleum company had made up its mind.

Presided over by no less a person than Admiral of the Fleet [the British fleet] Lord Webster Wemyss, it presents an interesting chapter in the world struggle for oil, particularly in its political aspects.

All the British Oil Development company wanted was what was left over after the Iraq Petroleum company had picked its twenty-four plots of eight square miles. Its directors made a modest request to be allowed to choose twenty-four additional sites of the same area.

* *

Referred to Geneva.

It was a purely British company, and when the IPC dickered and dallied, Admiral of the Fleet [the British fleet] Lord Webster Wemyss, or one of his assistants, went to Geneva and complained to the permanent mandates commission of the league.

"We are not trying to cut in on the IPC," he said in effect, "but let them choose their sites according to their agreement with the mandated government of Iraq. Because, until they pick their plots, we can do no picking."

Such a reasonable request from so distinguished a person brought action at once. The permanent mandates commission did as it usually does. It referred the matter to Britain, which dictated its reply to the effect that the British Oil Development company, being purely British, had no business airing its grievances before an international tribunal at Geneva. The commission referred the British company back to the British government.

A Brilliant Idea.

This the company presided over by the admiral of the fleet seems to have done and with no good result to itself. Probably the London government, as chief stockholder in the Anglo-Persian Oil company, which gets 23½ per cent of Mosul oil, could see no good in endangering its own profits.

So the admiral and his company conceived a brilliant idea. Make the concern truly international, and Geneva, being international, would have to listen.

Thereupon Italian interest, through the "Agenzia Generale Italiano de Petrolio," were invited to take 40 per cent of the stock in the new company, British capital maintaining the controlling 60 per cent.

Later, to make it truly a brotherhood of nations, the Germans and a Swiss-Franco group were let in.

Nothing Left Over.

Today the British and Italians provide 76 per cent of the capital, the German 12 per cent, and the Swiss-French 12 per cent. Since the Germans are more interested in selling oil equipment than in producing oil, Germany is empowered to supply 38 per cent of the construction work and the British Italians but 50 per cent. Italian and German politicians are counted upon to do good work in Geneva, counteracting the French and British.

The company has offered the Iraq government a deposit of $200,000 as evidence of good faith in the matter.

It seems that the original concessionary company, the Iraq Petroleum company, was pretty much wrought up about the activities of this newcomer and asked of the Iraq government that its 24 plots of 8 square miles each be increased to 10,000 square miles, thus making it pretty certain that nothing is left over.

* *

A Good Business Man.

Here the matter stands today. Officials of he IPC are in Bagdad negotiating with the king and his government. What the IPC wants above all is to hold up oil development for two or three years. Its American, British, and French officials feel that a natural reservoir is the best reservoir and that it would be suicide to dump Mosul oil on the already glutted market now.

The king, who is not a bad business man, is reported to have asked a $2,000,000 cash advance against future royalties if he agrees to postponement of work. The company countered with an offer of half a million dollars. Probably they will settle at a million.

* *

Compromise Reached.

In the meantime France and Britain are reported to have reached a compromise, but an expensive compromise, about the pipe line from Mosul to the Mediterranean. In order to pipe the petroleum to their respective ports of Beirut and Haiffa, the pipe will branch off at Abu-Kemal, on the Iraq-Syrian border, and two lines will run to the sea, one through French Syria to Beirut, the other through Iraq, Trans-Jordania, and Palestine to Haiffa. The cost of one line across 700 miles of desert was estimated at $10,000,000, but two will cost much more than that.

America, not caring a hang about the political niceties of desert pipe lines or mandated ports grabbed from ex-enemies, probably will use the cheaper, which in this case is the French line.

Darrah Sees New Civilization Rising in Western World; So. America Breaks Away from Europe

[This is the ninth of a series of articles on South America and its problems by The Tribune's Rome correspondent.]

By David Darrah.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BUENOS AIRES.—[Special.]—A few days in South America are sufficient to sense the new orientation of cultural relationships between the republics of the south and the United States of North America. This is a development of the last few years only, mostly since the war.

Some people here see already the development of a new civilization, developed through the confrontation of the new world with a new man characteristic of the western continent, whom the Europeans are already calling the "trans-Atlantic man," with differences in racial origin, but with a certain characteristic sameness in culture, energy, and character from the great lakes to the pampas. Realization of that dream, the Pan-American railroad, probably will be the final monument to complete emancipation of the new world from the old.

Eyed by Europe.

Our relations with Brazil for years have always been of the most cordial. Now in Argentina, in Chile, and other countries there is entering a new factor in the intellectual life of Latin America to which European nations which have hitherto been supreme in the cultural field are not indifferent, for they know that trade somehow follows closely cultural penetration.

That aspect has been the reason for the close attention which Europe has given this factor for the last century, until last year we find Lord D'Abernon, head of the British trade mission, pointing out, "Nor have we realized that the feeling for us in South America is an important commercial fact," and further, "The reaction of trade to the more deliberate inculcation of British culture which we advocate is definitely certain and swift."

* *

All Sons of Columbus.

Coming into the field later, we have made rapid strides which have been prompted furthermore by the natural tightening of the interests and bonds between northern and southern divisions of the continent. The Ibero-American exposition at Seville, Spain, was one concrete demonstration in Europe itself of the identity of American interests and community of many ideals and origins. Certainly much water has flowed under the bridge since Secretary of State Root paid his official visit to South American capitals some years ago.

The Pan-American union, instituted by Secretary of State Blaine in 1889 for closening commercial and intellectual relations, has for nearly a half century now served to give solid value to the fact that we are all sons of Columbus, while President Hoover's visit two years ago appears to have revealed the sources of much of the disquietude and paved the way for the better understanding which is now in full development. Those enthusiasts here of a new American civilization go so far as to say that the present century is a crossroad of world history, a parting of the ways which will see the center of gravity definitely transported across the Atlantic.

Everywhere I have found that the sense of nationalism, which has always been acute in the South American republics, is now coupled with a determination to break from that sense of cultural orientation toward Europe and develop an indigenous culture, no more looking to Spain and Paris. Cultural colonialism is ending, as has political and economic. And I wonder whether the so-called animosity between Latin and North America ever did exist as more than an abstract thought, for among the South Americans encountered on the steamer and among those encountered here the attitude has been one of courteous friendliness and kinship.

An exchange of professors and students between the United States and Argentina during the last few years has contributed much toward the new orientation of cultural relationships, I am told. So far this has been mostly Argentine students visiting the United States, and six or seven hundred of them study in the United States annually now. That is to be balanced the other way. Directed by members of their faculty and under the auspices of their embassy, Argentine students during vacations pay visits to North America and many remain there for a year in colleges or universities.

Students Encouraged.

Señor Alejandro Bunge, noted economist and exponent of close relations between north and south, has been active in encouraging students to acquire a first hand acquaintance with us in the north, and pays a visit regularly every year to North America. And many Argentine students and teachers, once returned from the United States, turn out to be enthusiastic admirers of our technique and system. Such has been the case of Señor Miatelo who, after a visit to California recently, has been writing articles and giving lectures on the culture of fruit and agrarian organization as practiced in California.

Lately, also a committee of Argentine school teachers paid a visit to the United States and have returned with admiration for the school system in the United States. They have written and spoken of this since their return, as a model to be copied.

Finding Common Ground.

There is also still much talk of the visit of United States writers and literary men to the southern republics. And notable echoes in the cultural field appear to have been left by Waldo Frank, writer and critic who, if our South American brethern are to be credited, was listened to attentively and left a definite impression of quickened sense of North and South American fraternity for the creation of a new human society, the American society, strong, young master of the future, in contradistinction to tired and decrepit Europe, ruler only of the past and condemned more or less soon to indisputable decay.

As a result to some extent of these cultural exchanges, an Argentine lady of high intellectual attainments, Señora Victoria Campo, is founding a review dedicated to furthering North and South American culture and devoted only to the writings of authors and critics of the two continents. The aim is everywhere to find common ground compatible for the collaboration of Anglo-Saxon North America and Iberian South America. All this means the definite banishment of the preconceived notions furnished to the republics of the south that it was well to be wary of the northern neighbor whose expansion was to be feared.

And it is undoubtedly due in large measure to our better cultural understanding that commercial relations between the north and south up to the present slump era improved. Our diplomats and business men, I am told, have personally been largely instrumental in bursting many of these bubbles and by their effort to understand and give consideration to South American differences of customs and language have inspired confidence which was lacking in the early type of our citizen who got down beyond the equator.

Old World Competition.

Our new position has not been gained without some struggle and competition, for the other European countries, which in many cases have large colonies in the South American countries, have long been actively engaged in spreading their culture and ideas and sometimes finance their activities out of the public funds of their respective countries on the grounds that the commercial advantages of the spread of culture justify it. The French have an institute of the University of Paris in Buenos Aires. The Germans also have a cultural society in Buenos Aires. The Italians, the Spanish, and the British all have their cultural institutions.

It is related that Mussolini proposed to endow a chair on the history of Italian art in the University of Buenos Aires on condition that he should be able to name the incumbent, which condition was found unacceptable by the Argentines. In Buenos Aires, however, there is a colony of 600,000 Italians. Italian culture is spread through frequent visits of lecturers on Italian letters and arts, such as Marguerite Sarfatti, who has recently been giving art lectures in this country. A veritable battleground of cultures and propaganda the old world is making of the new in both the southern and northern hemisphere.

One point where North American activities are weak and which many people here think might easily be remedied is that, while there are dozens of daily newspapers in Italian, German, and English, there are none published in English by North Americans. Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, and Santiago, Chile, all have British papers which, in a measure, effect the advantage, which the United States has acquired since the war, of supplying the best service of world information.

SOME COMMON SENSE ABOUT flu

This is the time of the year when flu, colds, and pneumonia are on the spread. And health authorities are urging all precautions.

Just what causes flu is not yet scientifically known. But a weakened, run-down condition may lessen our chances of escaping flu—just as it lessens our chances of escaping other winter ailments. So it's wise to keep our vitality and resistance high during these critical months. Avoid worry and exposure. Eat wholesome food. Get plenty of rest, fresh air and exercise. And start at once to take a good, fortifying tonic.

Doctors advise Scott's Emulsion

Scott's Emulsion is recommended by doctors because it brings the remarkable health-building and disease-resisting vitamins of cod-liver oil—in the pleasantest, quickest way. Scott's Emulsion is emulsified. So it's free from that strong "fishy" taste. It's easier to take—easier to digest—and it's more quickly absorbed into the blood stream.

As a result, Scott's Emulsion benefits you almost immediately. It promptly strengthens and revitalizes weakened systems. It improves your weight and appetite. It increases your resistance against the dread attacks of pesky colds and other winter diseases.

Try Scott's Emulsion for pale, thin children, too.

Made of purest, Norwegian cod-liver oil, Scott's Emulsion is rich in vitamin A, the growth-promoting vitamin that helps guard against disease. It is rich in vitamin D, the sunshine vitamin that prevents rickets. It also contains vital mineral elements that aid in forming sound bones and teeth. This gives Scott's Emulsion a special advantage for growing children, infants, nursing and expectant mothers.

Try Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil confidently. Doctors urge it. Millions have taken it. It tastes good! Children as well as grown-ups take it willingly. And it does good! Get a bottle at your druggist's to-day!

Life's Comedy at Its Best Is Seen at Spas

German Resorts Offer Just About Everything.

By Sigrid Schultz.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN.—[Special.]—Do you want to enjoy life's comedy at its funniest, get a glimpse of real Europe at play, and, at the same time, do some real good to your health? Without spending vast sums of money? If the answer is "yes," come on over and take a good German "cure."

For twenty centuries chieftains, princes, kings, emperors, big and small aristocrats and their "medicine men" have honeycombed this country in quest of the Fountain of Youth. They did not find one corresponding to the requirements of one Ponce de Leon, but when you see hundreds of thousands of Germans coming back to town from their annual "kur" at one of their hundreds of little spas you wonder if they have not found something similar to it.

They Enjoy Life.

As you know, the world likes to say that Germans are nothing if not systematic. Usually generalizations of this kind are all wrong—by the time they get around the world, the generations to which they referred have died out and a new one has been concentrating on some new fashion—but in this case it is different. Germans are systematic. They have built up health centers as similar to the old ideal fountains of youth as twenty centuries of princes, kings, emperors, and science could make them. Whatever you thing of the princes of yore, as you follow their trail through Europe you realize they knew much of the art of living, of the art of enjoying life. Health the old powerful potentates of the past wanted as keenly as you and I want it, and so they sent their best men of science out to find the miraculous waters to cure or relieve their ills. They found them. One dip, as in Ponce de Leon's fountain, is not enough, but three weeks of systematic cure will do wonders.

Wiesbaden was famous as Pontus Mattiacum, in the days of the old Romans, for its waters boiling out of the earth. Charlemagne went to Aix le Chapelle whenever his gout twitched too much. Bismarck, the welder of the German empire in the last century, sought relief in Bad-Kissingen. Baden-Baden saw the smart set of the 19th century parade down its Lichtenstein Allee. Bad-Homburg was the favorite resort of the kings of England until the early part of this century.

Where Nature Smiles.

Royalty came to the resorts with their courts—they wanted to be cured and amused—and so the scores of spas that dot the German landscape carefully built up elaborate scientific treatments with the help of the country's most famous doctors and universities, but they also evolved a tradition of entertaining truly worthy of the kings of old and of the 20th century.

Nature was kind to Germany, since she carefully hid her most potent waters in the most beautiful spots of the country. In some cases big towns, such as Wiesbaden and Baden-Baden, have grown up around the spa; in other places the spas have remained small, built up entirely for the sake of the patient; but, big and small spas alike, you never will know a dull moment while there.

Since we said before that Germans were systematic "cure takers," we might just as well study how they go about it.

* *

Fitting Their Hobbies.

Your well-to-do German will rarely set out on his vacation to go fishing, motoring, or whatever his hobby be. No He'll let his famly doctor prod his sides, thump his back, go through a regular examination, and let him point out which spot of his anatomy would be better for some attention. Then the doctor will suggest half a dozen or more places where his patient should take his cure—except in serious cases, where the doctor will sternly prescribe which spa is the one and only possibility.

In a milder case, however, the prospective cure-taker has quite a choice—and he'll make it to fit his hobby. If he loves climbing, he'll choose the spa highest up in the mountains; if fishing is his favorite pastime, you'll find him near a lake or river; if races add to the zest of life for him, he'll choose a spa famed for its races. Then he'll study the spa's program of the season and try to get there in time for events that interest him. Once the spa s decded upon, the family doctor sends the patient to a doctor friend at the resort.

Friendly Enemies.

One of the most popular health centers in Germany at the moment is Bad-Kisisngen. The doctors will tell you that it does wonders for the liver, the kidneys, the heart, and the entire internal tract; that it proves effective in the treatment of gout, rheumatism and nervous exhaustion.

Bad Mergentheim is another little spa for the same weaknesses, and the two complete for the honor of harboring the most famous specialists for these diseases and developing the most effective treatments against them.

Let me say right here that; though rivalry exists between the different spas, you will find the important leading doctors of Germany's resorts cooperating closely. There is a movement under way now, headed by Frankfurt's Prof. von Noorden and Kissingen's Prof. von Dapper-Saalfels, to organize a closer interchange of clinical observations between the specialists in Germany's leading spas—each spa developing most of its concentrated energy on one special branch and passing side information onto the center gathering just this information.

Hidden in the Hills.

Bad Kissingen, for instance, would concentrate on liver and inner tract, passing on its observations on the heart to Bad Nauheim, while Bad Nauheim, in turn, sends all notes made on the influence of the heart on liver and inner tract to Bad Kissingen. This system enables each group to go in more deeply for specialized research, yet guarantees careful coördination of experiments.

But you see little of this ponderous work of science when you arrive at Bad-Kissingen. Hidden away in northern Bavaria among wooded hills and forests stretching for hours in all directions, Kissingen is not far from old Frankfurt, the home of Goethe. It is a few hours' ride from Nuernberg, or that delightful Middle Age dream dear to the hearts of artists and tourists—Rothenburg a. d. Tauber. Wuerzburg, with its famous rococo castles, its heady wine grown by monks, its dark beer, it is a nice afternoon's excursion. Bamberg is not far, and its name conjures the taste of a specially mellow light beer for those who know the supreme delight of truly good beer.

Behind Their Backs.

If we delve further into the problem of geography we find the "Spessart" forest nearby, famed in German literature, while further north, also just an afternoon's excursion, are the Rhoen mountains, the home of the first sailplanes. On the sides of the "Wasserkuppe" young and old daredevils can be seen sallying forth on their exhilarating flights on motorless gliders. The annual international sailplane meet is held here.

Kissingen itself has built its houses in beautiful parks. Hotels and pensions abound, and a new type of "hostelry" has been evolved, but it has not yet found its proper modern name. It is a big or small hotel, usually a big one, fitted out according to all modern hygienic theories; one of its wings is known as the bathhouse," where all modern medical baths can be had under the supervision of doctors and where the latter dispense electrical treatments based on the newest discoveries of science. The food in most cases is controlled ricidly—secretly—behind the back of the guest, to comply with the orders of the guest's doctor. These hotels go under the name of "sanatorium"; the Germans love them—they feel that while they are at the sanatorium, even if they are not in a severe one, they are really doing something for their health. Those who love to be taken seriously and to be mothered according to all the rules of the art get a great kick out of a sanatorium, but the others, who enjoy doing what they are not supposed to do, according to the rule laid down by friend wife or friend doctor—don't you just know what a grand time they're having?

Bootleg Sausage.

Kissingen has those delicious fat Bavarian sausages ranging from white to pink, red, or almost purple. Sanatorium doctors specializing in treatment of liver and such diseases rarely approve of this colored tribe. Can you picture the joy of the grown up boys and girls of a sanatorium, going out to play hookey and eating a few of these luscious sausages? The kinks and weird traits of humans somehow come out more openly in a sanitorium than anywhere else, and provide a delightful comedy for those who enjoy watching the comedy of life.

The conscientious German who arrives in his spa will immediately call on the doctor recommended to him or on the "badearzt"—spa doctor. After a series of tests and conferences, the local doctor will tell the new arrival in Kissingen which of its famous waters is best for his constitution. Rakoczy, Pandur, the Luitpold, and Maxbrunnen, with a few others, are the sources which spring from the earth here—each different in its composition. Radioactive they all are. Every atom of their chemical composition has been studied and a specialist will tell the patient not only which waters to drink, but how many grams of each, at what temperature, the size of the gulps he may take, and the speed at which he can swallow the miraculous beverage.

There are few sights in the world more amusing than Bad Kissingen's guests gathering in the fountain hall between 7 and 9 in the morning. Germany's most famous bankers, her captains of industry gather here—princes, duges, multimillionaires from South and North America, and all parts of the world, and a few dashing adventurers—they all can be seen with a little glass in hand, solemnly filling it with Rakoczy, or whatever their brew be, measure its temperature, carefully heat it and then march around the hall and the park, taking careful sips, discussing business or sports or politics of the day.

After the "Brunnen" your cure-taker repairs to his hotel, enjoys a breakfast, probably with a "Bismarkstange"—a long zwieback shaped somewhat like a cane, which Bismarck used to like in his Kissingen days. It's a nonfattening zwieback, and as such very much in favor in Kissingen, since naturally hundreds who choose this resort do it to reconquer sylphlike lines.

25 Cents to $20.

After breakfast you get your medical baths, or electrical treatments, moor packs, moor baths—whatever the doctor decrees—and religiously multimillionaire, prince, duke, man of science, and little clerk follow the order of their doctors, be it in palatial private suites at $20 a day, or in the town's equally palatial bath house, where the bath costs 25 cents. All are equally eager in their quest for health and youth.

A great number of old time traditions survive. An "excellenz" still gets a special bow from genuine Kissingen citizens; princes still have their glamor here. There was one nice old prince in Kissengen last summer. I shall not give his name, because I intend to state that he was fat. To be more accurate, he had a regular old fashioned paunch. The old gentleman wanted to get rid of it, and asked the masseur for stiff treatment. One of Kissingen's favorite ways of taking fat away is to let the masseur or masseuse turn a regular hose on the patient—water under high pressure. While the slimness seeking victim turns slowly around the masseur or masseuse yells out orders: "Bauch—Reucken—Bauch—Ruecken," which, if translated accurately, reads: "Paunch—Back—Paunch—Back."

Addressing Royalty.

The Kissingen masseur, twelve years after the revolution, still felt that this was no proper way to address royalty, and so his voice boomed out into the garden surrounding the swanky bathhouse: "Bauch—Koenigliche Hoheit; Ruecken; Bauch—Koenigliche Hoheit"—"Paunch, your Royal Highness; Back; Paunch, your Royal Highness; Back"—much to the delight of the fellow guests of his royal highness. His royal highness had a sense of humor, however, and had a hard struggle to convince the masseur that it would be kinder to cut out his title in this case.

Most guests are through with their cure after the morning treatments. Those suffering from colds or weakness of the larynx go out in the afternoon to the "salinen," which are huge structures spreading salt charged air. However, from noon on, the average visitor goes after his hobbies and pet pastimes: Golf, fishing, hunting, racing, swimming, tennis, or excursions to investigate the beauties and historic sites of this gorgeous countryside.

Concerts in the afternon and in the evening lure those who love music. The "Kurhaus" with its marble halls is the scene of delightful, colorful balls—tea dances and their intrigues flourish for those who enjoy them. Twice a week the Munich opera gives guest performances in the little theater, where the best companies of Berlin, Munich, Frankfurt, and Stuttgart take turns at producing the hits of the season.

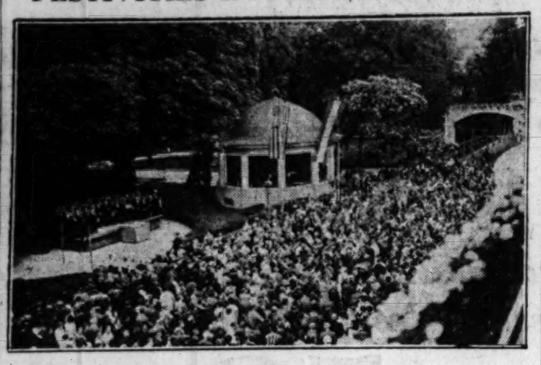
Explaining Rudeness.

The "cure" is supposed to take three weeks. The rite of drinking Rakoczy, Pandur, Luitpold, and Maxbrunnen, and other Kissingen waters may sound somewhat futile; nevertheless the results which the Germans achieve through these cures are remarkable. If they are not taken carefully according to the prescription of the doctors and under their supervision these waters of youth can do an incredible amount of harm. They affect the inner textures, and through "chemicalization" they affect the patient's nerves. He usually goes through what is known as the "Rakoczy Koller" or Rakoczy fury.

This "Koller" gives an acute fit of depression, and in some, equally acute fits of temper, and if, in Kissingen you meet somebody who is thoroughly disagreeable to you his or her friends will rush up and explain: "O, please excuse her. She is having her attack of Rakoczy Koller." You gayly forgive the offender, though it is well understood that one of the joys of Kissingen lies in the fact that you can say or do lots of things you would not dare say in normal life—under the slim protection of the Rakoczy Koller—which freedom, you certainly realize, may be quite rejuvenating in itself.

FESTIVITIES IN THE RHINELAND



BAD KREUZNACH, Rhineland summer resort and spa, gave this reception and festival two years ago in honor of members of the Illinois Turner associations. Sigrid Schultz today gives her impressions of the comedy and drama to be found at the German spas.

French Railways Boom.

PARIS.—(AP)—An increase of 11,000,000 passengers in 1930 was reported by the French state railways, despite the business depression and a decrease in tourist transatlantic traffic. Passenger rail receipts were $88,440,640.

SOUTH SEAS TOUR ENDS IN ANTIPODES

Bit of England Firmly Planted in New Zealand

But People Are Turning Toward America.

By Charles Dailey.
(Chicago Tribune Press Service.)

WELLINGTON, — [Special.] — The first impression the American tourist will get of New Zealand is that a bit of England has been set down here below the equator, together with a suggestion of the Swiss Alps, part of Italy, and a glimpse of Norway. It would seem to the tourist that the same type of English emigrant who came to the United States two centuries previously came to New Zealand a decade or so before the California gold rush. They are a cordial and delightful people who have settled in the southern hemisphere.

New Zealand is a country of dairies, of sheep growing; its milk and butter, its meat and wool, are its chief items of production. Also it has timberlands, and the bush is being replaced by trees, as forestation is part of the development plan and the making ready for further homesteaders.

* *

Cascades and Geysers.

Aside from that, New Zealand abounds in geyser basins and other forms of thermal activity, while the southern island has mountains and streams even more beautiful than the earlier settled and better known northern island. In all New Zealand there are good fishing and good shooting; there are falls and cascades.

Auckland, the northern metropolis, is a city of beautiful homes, drives, and vistas. It is a city of flower gardens; in fact, it might be called a city of flowers. The homes may be said to be built for comfort and not for a mere display of luxuriousness. If the visitor has come from Puget sound or from San Francisco via Samoa and the Fijis, his port of entrance will be Auckland.

In this city, situated on or about a chain of hills, and with a vista of the harbor before him, the tourist will see much the same panorama that was his privilege in San Francisco. Like many of our western American and Canadian cities, Auckland is a new city. On Jan. 29 of this year it celebrated its ninety-first birthday. It now has a population of around 193,000, and its growth has been steady and without its boom days and their reactions. Its habits and manners are English, but not necessarily of the London type. One finds the gentle home life of Devonshire and the energy of Lancashire. This comparison applies generally to all New Zealand.

Strong for America.

Auckland is a progressive city that has laid aside the axiom "Grandfather did it" and tries to do it better than grandfather did. One particularly notes in New Zealand that the resident is keen for American motors, typewriters, adding machines, agricultural implements, and the like in spite of the preferential tariff in favor of the home country, and as one travels into the interior the tourist will find the important dairy industry conducted more and more on American lines. In some ways it is an improvement, there being coöperation to a greater extent. There are stoops before every farm gate. Here are deposited the cans from the morning milking; motor trucks pick them up, set down empty cans, and carry the milk to the nearest coöperative dairy.

Your Favorite Car.

The tourist will find that the New Zealander is trying to attain further self-dependence. Many of the American motor cars have been coming into New Zealand as Canadian products, being erected in Canada, and such cars, as also tires and accessories, came in as British products, but the tendency now is towards the erection in New Zealand of assembling plants for the cars so widely known in America and the visitor will still be abel to find his favorite car.

It is one of these cars that the tourist will board when he begins his tour southward from Auckland after he has seen the beauties of that city and its environs. But even before leaving Auckland he will have found also that he can enjoy the talking movies in palaces erected without regard to cost and along the lines of those at home, and will find the program of almost the same release date and the admission price about the same as at home.

In planning his New Zealand tour the American should reckon that his day-to-day expenses will about equal those at home. In his tour from Auckland to Wellington he doubtless will prefer to go by motor, which he may rent, or make reservations in the comfortable motor buses that run daily in easy stages and for which a through ticket may be purchased and reservations guaranteed.

In the Thermal Region.

From the hills that give Auckland eminence he will have feasted his eyes across the water, with its myriad of ferries and other craft and the beautiful homes on the other side of the bay. Then he will be ready for his motor tour through the thermal region, which has its thrills and beauties, its lakes and mountains, and its water courses in some instances more interesting than in America and the forests equally entrancing.

His first stop, after a pleasant day's ride through a dairy country dotted with towns of fair size and well paved streets and other modern improvements, will be at Rotorua. Here he will get his first view of the springs and geysers. Books have been written on them and they need be touched but lightly here. Including the luncheon stop he will have had about an eight hour ride through beautiful and generally pastoral country, with herds of cattle and sheep grazing, with dairy and poultry farms on either side the perfect highway at intervals of about half a mile.

The Prince's Feathers.

At Rotorua the tourist will remain two and possibly three days and will find every moment of it interesting. He will be taken in motors to geysers large and small, across lakes—the beds of old craters—and around lakes of wonderful beauty, from which also geysers are sending up their vapors; will see mountains of grandeur which he will skirt and also the craters of volcanoes, some of which have been in action within the last few years, and he also will come into contact with the Maori, the native of New Zealand, who seems to have emigrated from the Cook islands. These Maoris are in many instances highly educated and likely as not one will be his guide. The Maori is noted for his soft and beautiful voice and for his singing, while perhaps of an evening the tourist will see some of the native dancing and folklore plays.

QUICK, WATSON, THE NEEDLE!

TATTOOING a Maori girl near Rotorua, North Island, New Zealand. Mr. Dailey describes New Zealand as a land of sheep growing and milk production, so far as business is concerned, and, in the way of scenery, a sort of combination England, Switzerland, Norway, and Italy.
